Nix2 Linux Monitor for the Pi's XFCE4 desktop Posted on July 22, 2015 After racking around on the other days with Raspberry Pi, I've had some time to play with my Ubuntu OS of choice – Linux Mint. Linux Mint, as with its Debian and Ubuntu spin offs, has a number of different desktop environments to choose from, including MATE (another popular XFCE spin off). One of these desktop environments that I've quite enjoyed has been XFCE4 for the Raspberry Pi (released in the April timeframe). The Raspberry Pi image is based on the Raspbian Lite (aka Raspbian) distribution, and includes XFCE4 desktop. The Pi's user space operating system is provided by OpenEmbedded, and includes a number of applications for managing the Pi. Most of these other applications are intended for the graphical user interface, and are easy enough to use, however one that remains a bit of a challenge is the XFCE (a fork of GNOME 2) desktop.

When I first installed XFCE4 on the Pi, I found this could be difficult to initially use. The right clicking approach to the ‘menu’ was almost non-existent (as the installer set menus up at the top panel, instead of the traditional right clicking method of the OS). There were also no right clicking buttons for the panel, as this was not provided when I installed XFCE4 initially. To make life easier when using XFCE on the Pi’s XFCE4 desktop, I created a custom launcher that uses the ‘task manager’ of the XFCE4 desktop environment. This launcher is based on a screen shot I took, with the instructions provided on the correct steps to manually set the launcher up. As a bonus, this tutorial does not require any command line applications or

Million Dollar Movie 2010 Million Dollar Movie 2010 (Rockell Blu-ray)US DVD: 10 Jul 2010
Don Corleone (Al Pacino) is a businessman who owns the movie studio Paramount Pictures and is thus in a position to control the destiny of the family, particularly the head of household, Michael Corleone (Anthony Hopkins), who is considering running for office. To manipulate Michael into public office, the other four family members enter his life and commandeer his soul. Michael's oldest son, Frank (John Cazale), has also defected to the enemy. The matchmakers are his daughter, Connie (Sofia Coppola), her fiancé, Paulie (Joe Piscopo), her brother-in-law, Fredo (John Cazale), and their sister, Carmela (Catherine Keener), whose father, Johnny Fontaine (Marlon Brando), still lives in the good graces of Don Corleone. The old man continues to demand that Johnny attend him for advice, which is periodically dispensed. The movie doesn't always click with me, and I think some of that is the absence of much from the source material. Sometimes the movie can be very good, but more often, the good moments are overwhelmed by the mundane. Anthony and Pacino are great, but it seems like the third John Cazale, in a role that should have required a minor supporting player, takes over a great deal of the movie. It may also be that the adaptation has obscured Pacino's abilities, the best of which is his ability to convey states of mind – see his scene in which he packs a gun and then tells his family (and everybody in the mob) that he's leaving the movie business. The greatest movie of all time, according to some, is Don Siegel's The Godfather. The last time I saw it, many decades ago, it changed my life. No one who has seen The Godfather could claim that it didn't. I can't say that about Million Dollar Movie. It also stars Roberto Rossellini as a fellow screenwriter who once helped Siegel with the script for The Godfather and who has as much clout in the
