Field of the Invention This invention relates to an improvement in a remote keyless entry (RKE) system for mechanically controlling the movement of a motor vehicle by an electric signal. 2. Description of the Prior Art A conventional RKE system is described in the Japanese Patent Laid-Open Publication No. 24128/1981. The system comprises a main transmitter, which is installed in a motor vehicle, and a remote transmitter, which is carried by a person and is installed on the person. Each of the transmitters includes a key lock system for opening and closing a vehicular door lock, a control system for opening and closing a door window, and a door hood lock system. The control system controls the vehicular door lock system by generating and transmitting an electric signal, which is in conformity with the operation of a key (car key) of the transmitter itself. The transmitters are installed at different positions in the motor vehicle, for example, on the doors, on the window blinds, and at the head of the motor vehicle itself. The RKE system is also installed on the motor vehicle. The control system is arranged to operate the vehicular door lock system by receiving an electric signal from the transmitter. The control system of the remote transmitter is adapted to shut down the vehicular door lock system when it receives an electric signal in conformity with the operation of the key of the remote transmitter itself. However, when the person carrying the remote transmitter and the main transmitter desires to shut down the vehicular door lock system, he or she has to operate the door lock system of the remote transmitter. In other words, since both of the transmitters are arranged to shut down the vehicular door lock system, in case of an emergency such as when the vehicle is under theft risk, there is a possibility that a person holding the remote transmitter will shut down the vehicular door lock system. In order to solve the problem described above, it is an object of the present invention to provide a system which can allow a person holding the remote transmitter to operate the vehicular door lock system under the emergency situation. 570a42141b
