I don't know if it's the best way to do it. But, the thing is that I would like to use a different directory if the file isn't found to avoid errors and it seems that "s" isn't changing. Is there any way to change that? def check_dir_exists(fn): def decorated(*args, kwargs): try: os.path.exists(s) except (AttributeError, OSError): return fn(*args, kwargs) else: return True return decorated I was thinking of doing: def check_dir_exists(fn): def decorated(*args, kwargs): s = s + "dir_exists" try: os.path.exists(s) except (AttributeError, OSError): return fn(*args, kwargs) else: return True return decorated I'm also not sure if that's a good way of doing it. If there is any other way of doing it, I would appreciate it. Thanks. A: In Python 2, *args and kwargs are always assigned to the *arg, kwarg params of a function call, as the docs say: If *args or kwargs are not None, then *args and kwargs are simply passed to the function without modification. Otherwise, *args and kwargs are bound to the args and kwargs parameters, respectively.

(20) In a past life, there was a person who dies because of his greed. Today it's a great day to die. What does this mean? Is there something about his greed that made him die today or his death is just a coincidence? A: This is an American idiom meaning 'it is a lucky day to die'. There is no special significance to the word great, and there is no personal significance attached to the days. The connotation is that life is hard enough, and if something bad happened to you today it might be better to die than to live with it. A: When I was a boy (a generation ago now) I think this was an idiom used when one was sick with the flu and was going to die, for example. It was probably just used to make a lighter statement of the expected death of one or more people. The speaker can be referring to any death, not specifically to a person.
