The new generation of the sports car is expected to arrive on the Japanese market in Spring 2014, but we'll see it first on April 18th when the 2014 Geneva Motor Show takes place. The styling of the Supra was revealed in Detroit a couple of weeks ago, and we've already seen the first generation car. It will be built in a new facility in Austria, and it's a bit smaller than the old version, which has a wheelbase of 3,037 millimeters. The new Supra will arrive with a detuned version of the twin-turbocharged 4.0 liter V8 used in the current version, and we're going to see many improvements for the upcoming model. With the introduction of the new Supra, Toyota has decided to stop producing the Avante model. We're not exactly sure how the new Supra will have been produced, but it probably would have been built at the then Lexus plant in TMC. It was supposed to be the future of the brand. They chose to use this new engine also for the arrival of the new Auris, and we could have seen a new Supra and Auris in the future. Now it's up to us whether to enjoy it or not. This new SUV will be much more powerful than its predecessor, and it will even come with two turbos and a redesigned styling. It's going to be 1cdb36666d
