How can I download Test Bank For Physics 2ND EDITION?The Army has issued an RFP to the General Dynamics C4 Systems for the National Computer System (NCS). NCS will allow the Army to perform the roles as well as provide the interfaces for the Army's domain and information technology architecture, and provide the services that support the Army's leaders at all levels, command and control and in the field. The Army's strategic plan for the acquisition of the NCS is to replace tactical command and control systems, such as the TACLAN, to include Army Maneuver Command System (AMCS), Defense Information Systems Agency (DISA) Army Tactical Information Collection Program (ATICP) and tactical Control, Reporting, Surveillance, and Measurement (TACSARMS) System. In October 2017, General Dynamics C4 Systems received a $1.3 billion fixed-price-incentive contract to provide systems integration for NCS. "The Army will continue to make historic investments across the department to build a more modern Army capable of projecting power anywhere in the world to meet current and future challenges. NCS will provide the digital transformation of the Army we need to maintain our military advantage, and to meet the demands of the Army's growing mission set," said Army Program Executive Officer for Information Systems and Networks, Major General Robert Nellis.
