Kalisina Subhavela Serial).The following blog post, unless otherwise noted, was written by a member of Gamasutra's community. The thoughts and opinions expressed are those of the writer and not Gamasutra or its parent company. I know it sounds like a crazy thing to think, but sometimes the small things matter. Over the past few months, I've come to realize that one of the most commonly used resources in game development is the character creator. There are only so many characters, and the more complex your game, the more you can make use of these things. Players are just like you, and you need to design something useful for them that feels appropriate. Consider this: how often are you going to have a motorcycle gang in your game? I bet you're not. I'm going to walk you through the steps of creating these characters yourself. Please note that this is my own experience in creating them, using the Unreal Engine 4.5 character creator, and not an example of how to do it in your project. If you are thinking "I only need one motorcycle gang," think again. More will come later.

1) Designing Your Character Okay, start up your character creator. I'm not even going to review all of the different ways it can be done in UE4, because that would be too much. There are tutorials all over the internet. When you enter into the Create menu, you'll see a screen like this: This is the "standard" selection menu. What you see is that you can make this character a MAN. Or a WOMAN. Or a RECRUIT (which is the default if you use the sample assets). You can make this character tall, skinny, have short hair, or be very overweight. You can make this thing old, young, or in between. The options are too many to list here. So let's create a pirate. Well now, if I want to design my pirate, I don't want to just place a rectangle in the middle of the character. It doesn't feel right. We're going to start thinking about the colors and shapes we want
