Urban tanks can be found on every campus. They are relics of a time when students were a desperate lot with no money and nowhere else to go. As universities have become more modern, their need for the tanks has died down. However, some abandoned urban tanks still populate the minds and hearts of many students. For some, the urban tanks represent the last traces of a space that never existed for them. For others, these tanks serve as a unique place to call their own. The University of Michigan was one of the first universities to install urban tanks in its residence halls. These tanks were designed to save the University money on its large lawns. The tanks were also designed to save on heating and cooling costs as well. So, why would anyone consider living in an urban tank? It's not easy to figure out the draw these tanks had on students. One thing is for sure, most students don't want to live in them anymore. They are dusty and dirty, and could potentially get wet from a leak. The University of Michigan placed an advertisement in the newspaper to list the existing tanks. These tanks are so small that they don't even have a name. People have been searching for them in vain to check to see if a person is living in it. The signs on the tanks say, "Live in this tank or live in the real world." Students didn't think twice about living in these trashed tanks. It was a way to save money and a good place to live. Why would anyone not want to live in such a thing? Many students have been living in abandoned urban tanks for so long that the University forgot about them. However, the University has recently been renovating the remaining tanks and making them more modern. The University even installed an air
