C:\xeniaemulator\roms

fill valve operate? I can see that there is a solenoid that presses on a cup that acts like a plunger. There is a spring underneath and the solenoid is powered by electricity. How is this mechanism designed to work when the electricity is off? How does the spring work? A: When the flow has stopped there's a spring on it's own which pushes down the plunger. Since the vent in the top (known as a spring) is bypassed when the plunger is pushed down (while there's a leak through the solenoid) there's some drop in pressure which will drop the cup. Q: Does the picochip N8250 have an optoisolator? I want to use a Picochip N8250 based on the Atmel SAM4L for a project that requires ADC/DAC. To do this, I need to use an optoisolator (in parallel with the MCU), which is confirmed in the Atmel datasheet: If I take the datasheet at p. 62 and look at the components in detail, I find that I should have a ZIF-based optoisolator available for this part: d0c515b9f4
