The game is also the first of the series to use the Physically Based Character Modeling (PBCM) graphics engine, which calculates a player's physical attributes in real-time based on detailed 3D human biomechanics and physics. Players can play with highly realistic and distinctive looking players with more detailed and realistic feet than FIFA 17, and a more detailed muscular and skeletal structure. The new engine will be used to create more lifelike players in other upcoming FIFA games. "This is the culmination of FIFA being a sport simulation game for over 30 years. With FIFA 21, we continue to strive for realism and authenticity while further enhancing the player experience in ways that change the way players strategise, understand the game, and react in real-time," said Aaron McHardy, Senior Producer for FIFA. "In doing so, we're able to capture more movement, create more accurate and detailed physics, and leverage our new, game-changing PBCM engine to create the most realistic looking players ever. We're even able to tell the players' off-the-ball movements, predict their next move, and react accordingly. These changes will not only make your gameplay more fun, but help the players be the best they can be while controlling them." The computer player AI has also been enhanced, allowing the game to react more intelligently and in real-time. Specifically, the player AI will understand more opponents' strategies, read the game, predict where the player might be going, and get closer to that destination so that the computer can take advantage of this. Players will also be able to move faster, run more quickly, and sprint more efficiently. A new Fouls & Interceptions subsystem has been added for more accurate and refined fouls and cards, and an improved Ball Control system for controlling the ball and setting up moves has also been added. FIFA 20's gameplay is also the most authentic in the series, offering full, 360-degree player movement, realistic player behaviour, and real-world player talent and skill. Skill trees, game modes, and player upgrade kits continue to be overhauled to address real-world trends and player needs. Players will have the ability to choose from 17 national teams and the ability to represent 11 full leagues. Real-world attributes, such as physiology and game-specific data like shot-speed can be applied to each team, player and team. There
