A Greek general has resigned after a video was widely shared on social media this month showing him singing Greek folk songs. The video, which was viewed nearly 14.4 million times and tweeted more than 96,000 times, was filmed at a military parade in Athens in July. Singer Sarantis Sarantakos, 64, is considered one of the country's best-known singers and plays folk songs in local tavernas. In the video, he is seen singing military marches during a military parade. "I don't do this. I mean, I can't sing like this," Sarantis says as he covers his face. "I can't sing like that, I'm not a folk singer." Sarantis, who has been in the military for 41 years and is originally from Central Macedonia, was taken into custody after the video was published and is awaiting formal charges. He said on Friday that he is resigning after finding out he was being investigated for "disparaging the army." "I have agreed with the minister and his assistants to resign for personal reasons," he said. Police confirmed to The Associated Press that Sarantis was under investigation, but did not provide details. In the video, Sarantis is seen wearing a military uniform and smiling as he sings, "We are ready to protect our country, our friends, and our brothers." The video's caption says: "Shameless Sarantis Sarantakos." In a video from the same event, Sarantis also sang the song "The Oath" and "The Mayflower." In a Facebook post that has been shared more than 3,000 times, Sarantis says he has performed in similar events every year for 41 years. "I am receiving a lot of hate. They want to see me in jail," he told the AP. "I have sung in Greece, I've performed before a lot of Greek officials," he added. "I've never been arrested or asked to resign." The video has been shared thousands of times across social media and has angered many Greek social media users, most of whom feel he is disrespectful to

Q: Cocos2d: Pop a view, and add a hit-test to that view so it ignores touch events I need to pop a view (ccmenu, like in a keyboard), and put a background (ccbackground) in it. I'm using a touch-up-inside handler, but the mouse is still being caught by that background! How can I disable touch events on that view? A: What happens when you touch a view in a Cocos2D scene is determined by the touch handling that you've implemented in the scene. You must be doing it incorrectly. If you're not implementing the touch handling, then it's the default handling in Cocos2D. When a touch is received for the first time, Cocos2D calls ccTouchesBegan() for each touch that it is aware of. When Cocos2D receives the touchesEnded() message, it calls ccTouchesEnded() for each touch that it is aware of. Cocos2D maintains a list of the touches it is aware of in the touch handling methods. This is also called the CC_TOUCH_STATE_PEDIGREE in ccTouchesBegin(), ccTouchesMoved() and ccTouchesEnded(). So, if you want to ignore a touch when it is received for the first time, just don't call ccTouchesBegan(). If you don't want to dismiss a view when a touch is received, you don't have to call ccTouchesEnded(). Instead, just call ccTouchesMoved() to remove the touch that you received from the touch handling. The critically endangered greater bilby and the lesser bilby, a marsupial that was introduced to Australia over 150 years ago, should both be reclassified as critically endangered wildlife. The greater bilby, Macrotis lagotis, is the smallest of the bilby species, with males standing about five centimetres high and weighing around 15 grams, while females are slightly larger, standing around 6.5 to 7 centimetres tall. The bilbies' numbers have plummeted in recent years due to factors including climate change, cats, foxes and rabbits. They are so rare in fact, that they were last sighted in Perth 100 years ago. A recent Australia Zoo survival study also showed that bilbies can
