I understand a simple integration but I don't understand this one. Does it mean, that the outcome of the integration doesn't represent an actual truth but rather some estimated probability? Or does it mean that the actual result of an integral is that it says nothing about whether the thing it calculates is true or false? A: An integral is not true or false. It is a recipe for how to write an expression which represents the value of that integral when we know all the properties of $f(x)$ and $g(x)$, as well as all the data that we are using to do the integration. If we only know those properties in a weaker form (e.g. only that $f(x)$
