[Content of Cd, Pb, Cu and Zn in the tissues of different organs of the rat]. The content of Cd, Pb, Cu and Zn in different organs of rat and in the liver of the rat and the man is described. Certain quantitative differences and some qualitative ones are established. These differences are observed not only between different organs of the organism and between organs of different species but also within the same organ in different tissues of the same animal. These are mostly the results of different genetical and metabolic peculiarities of the organisms. The trace elements in the physiological "microelements" are bound to the hydroxyapatite of the bone and teeth, which is the solid form of the physiological copper. The content of Cd in bone and in teeth is lower than those in serum. The content of Cd in the brain is about three times less than in the serum; for Zn and Cu it is about five times less. of the present invention may further comprise a temperature compensating circuit, connected to the second terminal, for setting the temperature at the heat dissipating portion to a constant temperature, so that the resistances of the resistors in the first and second temperature-resistance elements are changed in correspondence with the temperature. The temperature compensating circuit may comprise a thermistor, the collector of which is connected to the second terminal. The temperature compensating circuit may comprise a thermistor, the base of which is connected to the second terminal. The temperature compensating circuit may comprise a thermistor, the emitter of which is connected to the second terminal. The temperature compensating circuit may comprise a thermistor, the emitter of which is connected to the first terminal. The resistors in the first and second temperature-resistance elements may respectively have resistances which are changed in correspondence with the temperature. A fourth aspect of the present invention resides in a temperature sensor for detecting temperature according to the third aspect of the present invention. The temperature sensor may comprise a first temperature-resistance element connected between a first terminal and a second terminal, the first terminal being operable to be cooled to a constant temperature. A second temperature-resistance element is connected between the second terminal and a third terminal, the second terminal being operable to be heated to a constant temperature. A first terminal has an output portion which is connected to the third terminal. A fourth terminal is connected to a fourth terminal. A comparator comprises a first input

Man dressed as a woman sells over 1K tickets for women-only game Tickets for a basketball game by the Phoenix Mercury sold out in about 20 minutes on Friday, the team said Saturday. (Arizona Diamondbacks) Jessica Boehm A man who dressed as a woman and sold tickets to a Phoenix Mercury game has sold more than 1,000 tickets before the first tip-off. Christian Reed, 24, has garnered national media attention since being arrested earlier this week after asking women to enter the arena. Police said Reed attempted to sell tickets to the women's basketball game between the Mercury and the Phoenix Mercury WNBA team on Friday. Reed was arrested after an officer recognized him from previous incidents, police said. Reed has since been charged with 10 counts of criminal impersonation, identity theft, disorderly conduct and attempted to sell tickets to an event where admission was restricted by gender, police said. He is scheduled to appear in court Dec. 10. The Mercury said in a statement Friday that they are "aware of his intentions and misleading attempts to sell tickets to men and women." The Mercury's general manager, Michelle Rasmussen, told AZFamily that Reed's performances "caused a division" in the community. "This game was for the women to watch.... I think it's causing some division in our community," Rasmussen said. "It's not what we're about." The Mercury's ticket office is "out of order, and we have been asked by the police department to not process any more tickets until this is resolved," Rasmussen said. Ticketmaster, the ticket reselling company, offered a refund or credit for those who had tickets and were considering not attending the game, the Mercury said in a tweet. Phoenix Mercury tickets sold out in under 20 minutes this weekend. We have seen a large demand for tickets around the nation. Refunds are available in your Ticketmaster account. Thank
