The objective was to evaluate the role of imaging in detecting the presence of asymptomatic testicular microlithiasis. We retrospectively reviewed the electronic medical records of all patients with testicular microlithiasis diagnosed between 2003 and 2014. Patients' clinical presentation, testicular ultrasound findings, and testicular histopathology findings were reviewed. Testicular microlithiasis was diagnosed in 11 patients (7 male and 4 female patients). Mean age at the time of diagnosis was 36.4 years (range, 19-59 years). The most common presentation was lower abdominal pain (n = 5), followed by unilateral testicular pain. (n = 3). No patient complained of scrotal pain. One patient presented with abdominal pain and bilateral testicular pain. Ultrasound showed heterogeneous hyperechogenic foci in the testicular parenchyma. Two patients had a unilateral testicular cyst. Microliths were removed from testes of 6 patients. All patients who underwent surgical exploration had bilateral microlithiasis should be considered in patients with normal testicular size and heterogeneous hyperechogeneous hyperechogene foci in the testicular microlithiasis is commonly detected on the basis of ultrasound alone, even in asymptomatic male pain and bilateral testicular size and heterogeneous hyperechogeneous hyperechogeneous

This week has seen some interesting developments in the game as the All Blacks showed a different kind of defence from the one they were fielding in the last two clashes in the southern hemisphere. They scrapped off the ball and turned to the flanks. This did make the match trickier for the Boks, who have been exposed by the tactic in the last two clashes. The problem is that once a team begins playing in this style, it is harder to escape the clutches of their tactical innovation. Read: All Blacks' new approach leaves space for attack, but can also be exploited When things aren't going well for the Springboks, it means the door for the All Blacks is always open if they can do the simple things well enough, as they did against the World XV and then the Lions. No mistakes for the All Blacks If you simply watch this match on paper, the key to victory is the All Blacks escaping with a relatively easy 17-15 scoreline. If the Boks could even limit the All Blacks to six points, that would be something - but even if they managed to fight their way back into the game, a fourth try in the last five minutes seems unlikely. The stats certainly point in the right direction. The All Blacks went through their list of players and dropped only 17-year-old flanker Malakai Fekitoa for prop Owen Franks. In fact, their team has played the most number of players since the World Cup in 1999. The intensity of the Boks was evident during their post-match haka and the All Blacks were left wondering how the Boks ever came out of third gear. The Boks will therefore be hoping that other things work their way for them in this game. The Spring
