“By harnessing the power of the real world, the team at EA Sports has taken huge leaps forward in delivering a game that lives and plays like the game you are a fan of,” said EA Sports FIFA 22 creative director David Rutter. “By incorporating the world’s top professional players who have immersed themselves in the data, we have created a realistic, authentic, and above all, skillful way for the game to be played.” Motion capture technology is used in sports games at EA to replicate player movements in a lifelike way. Electronic Arts has experimented with using real-life players as motion capture test subjects in the past, and is bringing that expertise to the FIFA global team of experts to ensure that FIFA 22 delivers the highest quality gameplay. To test out FIFA 22, the FIFA World Cup team had 90-plus professional players go through a complete FIFA World Cup qualifying or final game to collect the data. These players were motion-captured wearing suits that tracked movements to record everything from sprints to tackling to passing. These players went through the same steps, using their normal gameplay habits and took part in the match using the same tactics, formations and goalscoring styles as a real player would in game. The data from these motion captures was then viewed, filtered and interpreted to add to FIFA 19’s excellent gameplay mechanics.

The FIFA World Cup 2018 is getting closer and closer, which means it's a great time for football fans to refresh their knowledge about the rules and regulations of the competition. We picked out some of the key areas that we think every fan should familiarize themselves with and find out how FIFA 18 changes that. What is the offside rule? Every sport that uses the concept of the goalkeeper standing between the goal and the opposition has their own version of the offside rule. Football, like many other sports, has quite a complicated version of the offside rule, as the referee is responsible for determining whether a player is in or out of play. FIFA 18 changes things up slightly. Playing in a more expansive refereeing role, FIFA 18's offside is an area you can actually see. The player must have control of the ball, rather than their own body, to be considered offside, and that responsibility is now on the referee. As with other sports, FIFA 18's offside is determined by where the ball is and not where the player is. This means that a player may be offside because of a bad touch or a poor pass, while he may not be behind a player simply because he takes a lot of touches to win the ball back. As for how this leads to fouls, we'll go into that after we've discussed something more pertinent to FIFA players: smart fouls. How do fouls work in FIFA? It's not all about offside for referees. FIFA's foul system is pretty straight forward
