The infamous politician – convicted for his role in a train hijacking in Germany last year – has also said that the Dutch government must be taken 'to court' for its post-1999 treatment of Dutch political refugees. But the leader of the Flemish separatist party NVA has also taken aim at his own country, accusing them of 'grandstanding' by complaining about the human rights abuses and discrimination faced by their fellow Belgians. 'I'm looking forward to it,' he added. These statements by Van Quickenborne raise the spectre of a return to the kind of violence meted out to Belgians by the Nazis during the Second World War, and have prompted warnings of an escalation in tension. For their part, the Dutch have warned the Flemish are on the brink of violence again. But, behind the political manoeuvring, what does this all mean for the future of the Netherlands' friendly relationship with Flanders? The Netherlands, which was one of the major victors in the Second World War, and which is still owed a large sum of money by its former colony Belgium, is deeply attached to Flanders. The Dutch approach to the region is more nuanced than the headlines suggest. A source within the Flemish Government tells the Telegraph that they

As Stan Culp, the county commissioner, likes to remind us, "In an anti-profit society, we can afford to help those who can't afford to help themselves." As reported by the St. Pete Times: Greg Gott, director of St. Petersburg's Community Organizing Center, is teaming up with Stan Culp, a county commissioner, to raise funds to help the homeless. Culp was one of the first residents to contribute his time and resources to the Community Organizing Center, which was opened in 2011. He volunteered with the organization for 12 years. Today, Culp, who is homeless, is hosting the Warm Beginnings shelter benefit with Gott at his Union Station apartment. Most of the money raised will go toward two projects that help the homeless, including the Community Organizing Center. The two events being held together are not actually being held in any of the same shelters, with one having been the site of Stan's storied final vigil in December 2012. Rather, they are being held at Stan's Union Station apartment, which is surely a nice place for Stan to be since it is given from the good offices of the county commission. Stan has rented out the second floor of his property (rented for $550 per month) in order to host the event. This will be a fabulous event as it will help hundreds of homeless people, it's d0c515b9f4
