Although Photoshop CS1 was the first commercially available photo editing package to use Photoshop, it was not a complete Photoshop replacement. Many users still use Photo Shop Elements as their overall image editing tool. Starting with Photoshop CS2, which was released on March 19, 2004, Adobe also introduced Photoshop Elements, which is a freeware program similar in functionality to Photoshop but is limited to the basic editing tools needed to repair photos. Photoshop Elements is a lot like Image Ready 2.0, an earlier but limited version of Photoshop. However, Photoshop Elements is now about 12 times the size of Image Ready 2.0, which makes it quite a bit easier to navigate the file structure. All the new features found in Photoshop CS6 are available in Elements as well. Photoshop Elements also has a plug-in architecture that enables users to purchase additional plugins, such as the Lens Correction Plug-in. Many of the features found in Elements are also in other Elements versions, such as Lightroom, an integrated image management program, and iPhoto, which is a digital photo management solution. If you're the kind of photographer who shoots in raw format, you may find Elements to be the better choice for you because it's been optimized to do the highest quality editing and retouching, including noise reduction, white balance, and sharpening. The Online Color Management System helps you to be more consistent when working with color. With this tool, you can view color calibration information directly from the panel. When you export an image for online sharing, you can also add color information, such as a device profile or ICC profile, to help other people working with the photo to understand the color relationships. The Photo Compressor adds compression to JPEGs to speed up their transfer over the Internet. You can specify how much compression to apply and set the amount of compression to give up as a percentage of the original file size. Photo Compressor adds the following optional features to the standard JPEG compression: • JPEG artifacts reduction • Color space conversion • Image transformations (including rotation, distortion, and JPEG rotation) • Adjustment layers • Red-eye removal • Layer effects and layer masking • Colour profiles • JPEG quality optimization • HTML export • Batch processing • Automatic colour-balancing These options aren't available in Lightroom, but Elements does include some (only selectable) editing and retouching tools that

Reports: Los Angeles Police Officer Killed in Shootout LAPD Officer wounded in shootout. Officer killed. By RedForth Created 11/13/2012 - 7:05pm APD Officer shot in shootout with suspect. Photo: Getty Images (CNN) -- The Los Angeles Police Department said a Los Angeles police officer has been shot and killed in a shootout with a suspect, a police source told CNN. Police said the fatal shooting happened in the West Los Angeles neighborhood of Newcomb shortly before 8 p.m. Monday (7 p.m. ET). They said the suspect fled in a vehicle, but was later taken into custody. Two other officers were shot and wounded and taken to the hospital, according to the Los Angeles Police Department. Police have only identified one of the injured officers as "a sergeant" but say they were in stable condition. The LAPD said the officer sustained injuries not considered life-threatening. One of the shot officers was transported in critical condition and the other was in stable condition, the LAPD said. Police said the shooting involved one suspect who attempted to run away from the scene after the officers arrived. "The officer (who) was killed in the line of duty was a Los Angeles Police Department officer that was sent to the location to investigate a suspicious vehicle," said LAPD Chief Charlie Beck said at a news conference Monday night. "He encountered the person in the suspect vehicle. After an exchange of gunfire, the suspect fled the vehicle and subsequently was taken into custody," he said. "The other officers involved in the shooting have been transported to the hospital and they are receiving treatment for what was initially described as non-life-threatening injuries," he said. "I can assure you that the officers were absolutely on the right side of things here," Beck said. Beck said the department would "not hesitate to release the name of the officer who was involved in the line of duty" if the officer's family wanted him named at the time of his death. "The officers who responded were brave and acted heroically," Beck said. "They prevented this from being more than it is." Beck said "it's too early to tell" why the man was killed. It appears that this officer-involved shooting occurred after a domestic dispute, the LAPD said. It remains unclear what led to the domestic dispute. The LAPD said the officers were responding
