Created using Ligue 1 data, FIFA 22 provides players with the ball-tracking and physics engine they've come to expect from FIFA, but also introduces a new "Physics Plus" engine which significantly enhances AI's natural and active behaviours, creating more intuitive player and ball behaviours. It uses this enhanced AI to re-introduce the close-up 'in-your-face' commentary available in previous FIFA titles, and it brings back the 6v6 World Cup mode in a more viable and viable online version. New modes FIFA Ultimate Team adds the new and improved Master League mode, which showcases players' teams from all around the world. The top 1,000 registered players on FUT in FIFA 21 in more than 155 leagues worldwide will be available in Master League. Players will start in a friendly league and progress through the Elite Leagues up to the FIFA "Global Showcase". This mode will offer 10 seasons, with team rosters refreshed every month to provide new players and content. There will also be a Champions League mode featuring teams in the Master League, including the top two teams from each league. Seasons will run between 5 months and one year. Squads across leagues are often very mismatched, with only a handful of players with European experience. FUT Master League Developers have improved upon Master League by introducing the Trainers' Room, where players can practice their skills and receive advice from in-game coaches. Completing training exercises enables players to unlock items for their teams. In addition, coaches can now be appointed from a list of "visiting trainers", which now includes the likes of Diego Maradona, Diego Simeone, Ronnie Roach, Joe Royle, Bertie Mee, Peter Reid, Iker Casillas and many more. Real-world opponents are evenly matched They'll feel more like a real-life match. In previous versions of FIFA, the same teams kept appearing every year in Champions League, with new teams flooding in when the season was over. As a result, you would generally know the teams of the previous Champions League and who to expect in the new one. In FIFA Ultimate Team, squads will consist of a mix of new teams and real-world opponents. Developed league data is used to ensure that teams look evenly matched with members who have different skill-sets. But more importantly, players are
