Complete control of your computer and your music with an iTunes multi-alarm widget. Set alarms to wake you up, set alarms to play music or set an iTunes remote control. You can turn up, turn down, set a snooze and repeat alarms and switch between alarms on different days of the week. Includes an "off timer" to turn the alarm off at the same time every day and a "snooze" button to remind you to catch a few extra Z's. Additional Features User definable Snooze and Off Timers Auto alarm clock functionality Alarm can repeat User definable alarms Alarm is disabled on weekends FAQs Does the widget work with other Mac apps? Absolutely. I have included the functionality to use Calendar to trigger events, share iTunes with the Apple Remote app, share iTunes events with the Safari widget, and share iTunes reminders with the Today widget. If you want to use more than one of these widgets, make sure to disable each widget before you turn on the next, as they tend to sync events with each other. Is the functionality working in iTunes 10.5? Unfortunately iTunes 10.5 has a bug that prevents me from turning on/off multiple alarm widgets simultaneously. I'm working on an update at this time, but in the meantime, you can disable your alarms and they will still work. (4.5 stars) I use it quite a bit. Makes it easy to check mail without having to open an app. Also, it can easily share the same alarm with any application/service that can handle AppleScript, and it will trigger alarms for them as well. It is easy to configure to your exact needs, so that's the way I use it. It's a default Apple Notification widget and you can not turn it off. In my opinion this app could be a great option for you if you have an iPhone, iPod Touch or both. (4.5) Simple, elegant and useful. The example shown does not work (unless you have set the "Program Search Path" to point to the directory containing the "mpv.app" binary), but the actual alarms in the example work flawlessly. The widget displays music from both the internal iPod library, as well as the iTunes library. In addition, you can set alarms to initiate iTunes music playback, or to initiate Apple b7e8fdf5c8

MultiAlarm lets you show up to three alarms on the Mac's desktop with the latest information from iTunes. Just connect and sync, and MultiAlarm will display information about the apps you are listening to, along with your calendar and clock. When enabled, MultiAlarm will show a few seconds of new information about an app on the Mac's desktop, along with the active playlist and the current station that is playing. You can also display your notifications, or turn off any number of alerts by tapping on the widget. Features include: ✓ Display 3 different alarms (2 days, 7 days, and off timer) ✓ Display volume (Music, Podcasts, and Books) ✓ Display Time in the widget ✓ Display all the free space available in the cloud What's New in This Version: ✓ Support for iPad ✓ More alert information IMPORTANT: If you have previously purchased Widgets for iOS, you will need to purchase MultiAlarm for Mac before you can use it. To do this, visit and click on the Purchases tab. If you already own Widgets for iOS but have not yet purchased Widgets for Mac, click here: It should look like this: ✓ Support for iPad iTunes MultiAlarm by Vasik Games is a free app. If you like this app, please take a moment to rate it on the App Store. It helps us a lot! Read the full App Store description. Privacy Policy: I love the app so much that I don't even know where to start with all my praises. But trust me, there are few: First of all, this is a great music and podcasts widget. Never, ever leave the app. You can also connect it with iCal and receive updates in your calendar. You can set alarm on Windows to remind you about your apps. If you need to go to sleep, just long-press the widget or tap the snooze button. It has a preview of the songs playing and a meter of the volume level of the song playing. Everything is easily to choose. You can set alarm for you music (iTunes), podcasts, books or all
