Q: Why does `awk -F '{print $1,$2,$3,$4,$5,$6,$7}'` not work? I want to read a tab delimited file, where the first column is a path prefix (for example /), the second column is the pattern (for example (root/)), the third column is a regular expression (for example (root)/text1) and so on and so forth for other columns. I am using awk with `-F 'flag'`, but the output of this command shows only the first line: `$ awk -F '{print $1,$2,$3,$4,$5,$6,$7}' a.txt` / Note that the output contains the spaces in pattern that I don't want in this example. What am I missing here? A: You probably need to use an FS of `:t` as in below example `awk -F ':t' '{print $1,$2,$3,$4,$5,$6,$7}' a.txt` A: With awk you can make a regular expression that uses `\t` as a delimiter, and we can do that by specifying the input record separator of `\t`. By default awk will split the input records on and use as delimiter. So, if you want to process records delimited by tab we can use FS of `\t`, which stands for tab. You can also use `-F` which denotes the default record separator. `awk -F '\t' '{print $1,$2,$3,$4,$5,$6,$7}' a.txt` If your pattern is constant, you can also use `-v` to specify it, which means split on pattern. `awk -v PATTERN='(root)' -F '\t' '{print $1,$2,$3,$4,$5,$6,$7}' a.txt` As @fedorqui wrote, if we want to use `\t` as a regular expression, then we should use `\t` as a field separator. `awk -F '\t' '{print $1,$2`

LG CHROMIUM 6865 review The Cr-6865 is a stylish, solid-state Android smartphone, thanks to a great 4.8" display and a rear facing 13MP camera. But the Android platform requires a bit of work to get to that point, and the Cr-6865's software isn't always easy to navigate. Specification HDMI out MeV 3.0 Android-powered OS 13MP rear facing camera 2MP front facing camera 5MP camera Stereo speakers Li-ion/Li-Po/C(D) Wifi b/g/n 3.2mm jack Dimensions 127 x 71 x 9.4mm Weight 172g Infos Prototype The LG Cr-6865 is a new Android smartphone from LG and appears to be a collaboration with PlayVision. The Cr-6865 has a 4.8" HD AMOLED display, three color modes and support for Pen Windows, which is one of the first smartphones to support this feature. There is a 2MP front facing camera, an 8MP rear-facing camera with autofocus and LED flash, stereo speakers and a 5MP camera. Connectivity is by 3.5mm, WiFi, Bluetooth and GPS. As with other smartphones using Android, the user interface can be a bit cumbersome and complicated to get to the main pages. Fortunately, the Cr-6865 does have some new features: a compass, game center and Pen Windows. This is a combination of the Pen Window app that has been included in the stock Android Lollipop version for now and Pen Window which is a new Android version from LG. Pen Windows has a special gesture interface and you can use it to draw, annotate, write and place a stylus on any display on your smartphone. Pen Windows is available for Android 2.1 and above, and includes a special app specifically for this purpose. LG has not provided any information about the hardware, GPS or battery life. The Cr-6865 is no larger than your typical Android smartphone, but it is a bit heavier. We think that if LG optimized the display and camera this smartphone could be quite good and affordable for most consumers. Display The Cr-6865's 4.8" WVGA display is 720x1280 pixels and
