Another often used browser extension: NoScript, will add protections to any website you visit. A: Your issue is most likely that you are running an outdated version of Java. Open about:support in your browser. If you get a message that it's available to you, you are not using a version of Java that will perform optimiztion for JavaFX. Click on any of the buttons to visit download links for whatever versions of Java are being used. Google Chrome: Mozilla Firefox: Internet Explorer: They all contain links to Java versions 8 Update 51 (xpi file) Make sure you update Java on your Mac. I will not know which version of Java your Mac uses. It depends on what version you were running when you installed Java on your Mac. You can find out by clicking on the Apple menu at the top and clicking on "About this Mac". If you're not sure what version you're running, you can look at the About this Mac window to find out. Windows: Mozilla This site also lists the version of Java that is being used on all the browsers: IMPORTANT: I said that you would have to update to Java 8 Update 51 in order for some kind of optimization to be performed. You don't HAVE to. If you have Java installed on your Mac, you can update it. If you have Java installed on your Windows machine, you can update to it. However, you may have to do so via the command line. If that's the case, you will either need to figure out how to update your Mac or Windows machine, or upgrade to a newer version of Java on the command line. I don't know what you need to do on Windows or OS X to determine which version of Java you're currently using.
