“We’re building out the engine to make sure we’re giving players the kind of immersion that they’ve come to expect from the FIFA franchise, while using the technology to give them a more realistic game,” said Dusan Tadic, Game Director, FIFA. “The gameplay will have more weight and will feel more lifelike. We’re using the technology to make sure that the player experience and the feel of the game is just as good as if they were playing on a regular game. We have also used these data to make improvements to the AI in the game, creating an AI that not only contributes to the flow of a match, but will also disrupt the opponent at times through the use of intelligent positioning and movement.” The Live Movement System is the backbone of FIFA 22, and is the most scalable of the systems used by the game. Players are able to make their custom animations easily, and are also able to customize their player model with the help of the in-game Animator, allowing them to create and swap player animations with ease. With the addition of the Live Movement System, the visuals on the pitch have also become more lifelike. More pronounced animations are being used to show players running, running with the ball, sprinting, and more. Players now move and run with more weight, and animations such as running with the ball and crossing the ball into the net are more pronounced and impactful. “One of the biggest visual updates is the addition of the ball physics,” said Li Gong, Lead Compositor. “The new intelligence of the physics allows us to do an incredible amount of visual effects, like particles, but also including animations that players perform when they kick the ball. The new physics in FIFA 22 allows for greater visual fidelity when delivering dynamic events on the pitch.” “The Live Movement System makes FIFA 22 a game that imitates the real world, and with the visual fidelity of our characters and animations, we’re now able to use the visuals to represent what’s happening on the pitch. We were also able to add more custom animations, like when players are on the ball. The hair and beards and the fur, especially on the faces, give us some leeway in how we can customize the character models to make them appear more real.” The Live Movement System will also be used
