Given the damages to the nature of the case, Mitchell essentially ran out the clock on the State and the victim. Although I disagree with the majority's evaluation of the harm caused by Mitchell's breach of the standard of professional competence, I agree with the majority's conclusion that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that Mitchell's actions were substantially likely to prejudice the jury. First, Mitchell's deficient performance substantially prejudiced the jury by leading the jury to believe that the State did not have to prove the critical element that the State had an agreement to trade the defendant's jewelry for the battery. Although Mitchell introduced evidence the victim struck and killed Mitchell's family members, Mitchell argued to the jury that the battery was accidental. Further, Mitchell attacked the State's witnesses, cast doubt on their credibility, and raised a witness's bias against the State. In an effort to lay the foundation for Mitchell's self-

The strategy has been adopted by a growing number of funding agencies, universities and scientific publishers to encourage researchers to publish their work on scholarly publisher websites. Over 260 institutional repositories (IRs) and more than 4000 institutional repositories exist worldwide. The Council of Europe Helsinki Statement on Open Access, adopted in 2006, provides an overview of how the scientific community can make use of open access to benefit their work.Loss of iNOS protein and nitric oxide production after LPS-induced endotoxemia. To investigate the loss of iNOS protein and nitric oxide production after endotoxemia, C3H/He mice were injected with lipopolysaccharide (LPS) and then treated with prednisolone. By immunoblotting, loss of iNOS protein was observed at 48 hours after LPS injection. Nitrite, a stable metabolite of nitric oxide, was measured with the
