Combined effects of antihypertensive therapy and obesity in the aged hypertensive patient. Despite antihypertensive therapy, a high proportion of the elderly hypertensive population continue to develop target-organ damage (TOD) and die of stroke. The purpose of this study was to determine the effects of antihypertensive therapy on the incidence of TOD and vital status in the elderly (age  $>$  or  $=$  65 years) hypertensive population. One thousand six hundred forty-one hypertensive patients (mean age = 72 years; 50% male) were treated with a standard antihypertensive regimen at 6 primary care centers. At baseline and after 10 years, left ventricular mass, systolic and diastolic left ventricular function, and ankle-brachial index (ABI) were assessed in 1167 patients (91%). Fifty-one percent were obese (body mass index [BMI]  $>$  30). Eighty-two percent of the obese and 62% of the nonobese patients had TOD at baseline. After 10 years, there was no change in the incidence of TOD among obese or nonobese patients, although systolic and diastolic left ventricular function were improved. ABI did not change in either group.

Low-carbon, geo-spatially accurate digital atlas of the world's peoples and nations.This invention is directed generally to a method and apparatus for manufacturing light emitting diodes (LED's) and more particularly to a method and apparatus for producing LED's using silica glass. In recent years, efforts have been made in the manufacture of LED's to replace conventional incandescent lamps with LEDs. The use of LED's for conventional lighting applications has been limited because of the characteristics of the LED lamp assembly which typically include at least one LED and at least one phosphor. Since LED's and phosphors have different temperature characteristics, the LED's operating temperature is limited to about 80° C. In addition, the phosphors employed within such LED lamp assemblies are low luminance, which, in turn, limit the achievable brightness of the LED lamp. Recently, a single LED semiconductor chip which includes a phosphor was proposed and others have since followed suit. This development has enabled LED lamp assemblies to be produced that have a substantially higher operating temperature, thereby improving the brightness of the LED lamp. However, because this type of LED lamp assembly includes the phosphor directly adjacent to the LED, the phosphor is often degraded when the LED lamp assembly is operated within a hot environment, such as a home, shop or factory environment. In view of the limitations discussed above, others have explored the use of other forms of phosphors which allow for the production of a LED lamp assembly that has a substantially increased operating temperature and which maintains the brightness of the LED lamp assembly upon exposure to high temperature conditions. One example of a phosphor which can be employed for this purpose is a germanium-containing phosphor. However, such phosphors typically have a relatively low luminance. Another example of a phosphor that can be employed for this purpose is a phosphor which is comprised of a dopant that is not included in the substrate, but is added to the growing SiC films. However, such phosphors generally exhibit lower luminance and higher temperature sensitivity than some of the phosphors that are incorporated into a host matrix. Thus, there is a need for a method and apparatus for manufacturing high brightness LED's

February 27, 2011 Nigerian lead producer signs short-term deal Nigerian lead producer Chizoba Solomon has signed a 30-month agreement with the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC). "It is indeed a great honour and privilege for my company, Olam Group, to have signed a new three-year agreement with NNPC to represent the Nigerian crude oil industry," Solomon said in a statement. "This agreement will give us the opportunity to upgrade our technology infrastructure to meet the government's mandate to bring new oil production to the country." Solomon hopes the deal will give Olam a competitive advantage over other local producers, who currently produce 95 per cent of Nigeria's oil. He added that it would also allow Olam to better meet long-term plans of the NNPC's without lengthy negotiations. "The NNPC and Olam both have enough experience to bridge the gap and fix the issues between the two institutions," Solomon said. "We are happy to be a part of this journey." According to the NNPC, N25 billion has already been set aside to finance the deal. "This is going to be the single largest investment in our nation's oil production capacity since the commissioning of our first oil production plant in 1970," Martin Eze, a senior petroleum engineer with NNPC, said in the statement. "The revitalisation of our oil industry is a crucial part of the government's plan to bring a new level of economic growth to our nation, and we look forward to a long association with Olam Group." The agreement follows similar agreements signed earlier this month between
