there was no one to blame for the perceived failure to close the deal, the jury would not be warranted in finding a reasonable likelihood of future success in light of the events transpiring in the years leading up to closing. The evidence presented at trial further supports the Court's conclusion that when plaintiffs faced a future that held little likelihood of success, they unreasonably delayed commencing suit. In 1968, Bergenfield informed B&G of the plaintiffs' challenges to the access road and the plaintiffs promised to pursue the matter with the state. Id. In 1970, despite such efforts, Bergenfield advised plaintiffs that the townships would not change their position, and plaintiffs' fears of harm were subsequently validated when no access road was built to the project. Id. Bergenfield himself testified that the project "couldn't go forward because of the worry about the access road," id. at 48, and the record thus demonstrates that plaintiffs were aware of their claimed hardships in 1970-72, knew that the project could not proceed, and reasonably anticipated that harm would result if the promise of access was not fulfilled. Plaintiffs chose not to assert their rights promptly, and indeed waited until the summer of 1976. They offer no reason why they delayed so long in taking a legal position on their access rights. The Court concludes that plaintiff's delay was both unreasonable and prejudicial to the Township. The eighth and ninth counts of the complaint are dismissed. E. Punitive Damages The County urges the Court to dismiss the plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages because the evidence demonstrated only that the County engaged in a negligent act or omission that was malicious, willful, grossly negligent, or outrageous. The County contends that proof of malice is required to justify the imposition of punitive damages on the County. The County bases this claim on the language of Ind.Code § 34-4-30-1, the general statutory authority to award punitive damages, and on language in Smith v. Bradt, 482 N.E.2d 575 (Ind.App. 1985), where the court indicated that punitive damages may only be awarded where the defendant's action was willful, malicious, or oppressive. Id. at 583. The County's reliance on the authority of Smith is misplaced. Section 34-4-30-1 authorizes the award of punitive damages against any person engaged in the commission of a wrongful act or omission and who knows that such act or omission is likely to, or is likely to endanger, others. Id.

What's New in the?

The periplasmic sulfate-binding protein: a sulfate source for cytoplasmic enzymes in Escherichia coli. In Escherichia coli, the sulfate-binding protein (SBP) is a periplasmic component that binds sulfate but its role remains uncertain. We show that SBP can be released from the cell through fusion proteins in which C-terminally located domains that retain high sulfate binding can be removed. These proteins retain the capacity to release sulfate from bacterial cells. When E. coli cells produce fusion proteins in which the SBP release domain is present at an N-terminal position, we observe a 50% decrease in cytoplasmic sulfate as compared to that of the parent strain. However, the level of sulfate accumulation in the cytoplasm of cells producing an N-terminal SBP release domain is comparable to that of cells that lack a functional sulfate transport system. These data suggest that SBP does not carry sulfate into the cytoplasm. However, we also found that SBP is required for the production of cytoplasmic enzymes, which synthesize sulphated compounds such as spermidine. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a vehicular lamp. 2. Description of the Related Art A vehicular lamp is conventionally known in which a first cylinder, a first reflector, and a second cylinder are arranged along an optical axis in the order listed, and in which first and second light sources, each of which emits a first light flux toward an irradiation direction, are disposed inside the first cylinder and the second cylinder, respectively (for example, see JP-A-H10-50274). In this vehicle lamp, each of the first light source and the second light source has a configuration which includes first and second light flux generating elements, and a partitioning member for partitioning an internal space of the first light source and the second light source into a light flux generating chamber and a shielding chamber. The shielding chamber for shielding the second light source is formed on the outside of the first light source and the second light source, with a pair of partitioning members provided on the first and second light source. An opening is formed in the partitioning member of the first light source, and a first shield wall, which has a U shape in cross section and is extended from the first light source, is provided on the outside of the first light
