Cannot filter "product categories" by "variant_price" I cannot filter "product categories" by "variant_price" (or "sold" in the screenshot) I have a product "group" that has several variants. The group product has a field "variant_price" to make it possible to sell the variants separately (each variant is a price I can set manually to sell in a part of the site without the user having to pay). When I try to filter the product categories by "variant_price", I get "Item does not exist" I've tried these variations: Product Category:

Q: Is there a command to show which default screen is active? Usually, there are two default screens: the first screen is 'Screen 0' on a computer with two screen (e.g. I have two windows on the second screen) the second screen is 'Screen 1' on a computer with one screen Is there a command to show which screen is active? I'd like to use it in an shell script. A: Getpid - This command returns your PID, and you can use it to check whether you are on a different screen than the default screen.

get_screen() - This function returns the screen number. You can also use it for checking screen number. Remember to confirm with both of them from the command line before using them for any script. A: I find myself a lot of times in the situation where I am working on some other screen than the one I want to see, and the way I work is as follows: I use an "always available" shortcut to one of the virtual terminals. Those are Ctrl+Alt+f# where # is 1 for Ctrl+Alt+f1 and 13 for Ctrl+Alt+f13. Anyway, with the above shortcut I can save a lot of time in browsing and switching between terminals. If you follow my example, notice that the shell starts on the terminal corresponding to the 7th (f7) virtual terminal, so the shell must be started from the terminal 7. You can use `get_screen()` to determine the current screen number, and then you may determine the virtual terminal from which it is running with the `getvt()` function. Finally, the last resort for detecting the active window is to output all the active windows to a file; then find it and extract one with the `X11_display_XGetWindowAttributes()` function. I put an example of the above method inside my `.bashrc` file, with the following commented lines: `# Return the active screen number function get_screen() { # Open a virtual terminal, print something to know which terminal is the active one. # As it's not possible to open a virtual terminal from the GUI, we must start # the shell from virtual terminal 7 (f7). [ -t 7 ] && exec >&7 # Get the`
