There are two editions of Photoshop Elements: Standard and Premier. While both versions offer enough features to work on photos, images, and other types of content, the Premier version offers more tools, and some of the later tools that are in the CS6 programs are not available in the Elements version. Elements does not offer all of the tools of the CS programs, and is more of an efficient tool for novice photographers. It does, however, provide many of the basic tools that are found in Photoshop. For example, it has many of the tools found in the Clone Stamp Tool in Photoshop, and offers a pretty good adjustment tools and even has some graphic design tools such as text and a color palette. One of the greatest strengths of Elements, though, is that it has very good, easy-to-follow tutorial videos. Adobe is one of the best at producing video tutorials for Photoshop. Priced at $120 for the Standard edition and $280 for the Premier edition, Elements has about the same features as the CS programs. ## Adobe Photoshop Lightroom You can use Lightroom in two different ways: as a stand-alone program or as a Photoshop plug-in. Photoshop Lightroom for Apple Macintosh is a version of Lightroom that runs in the Mac version of Photoshop CS6. Lightroom is a powerful application, not just for creating, editing, and organizing images but also for adding special effects, building content libraries and catalogs, and even creating professional-looking print materials, such as custom calendars. With Lightroom, you can access many of the same metadata as the CS versions of Photoshop, and have access to extra functions, such as the ability to import images from just about any camera, software, or other source. Priced at $350 for the CS3 edition and $500 for the CS6 edition, Lightroom has about the same features as the CS programs. ## Digital Photo Professional (DPP) DPP is a robust, well-supported program, which includes all the tools in Photoshop (with a few exceptions) and other professional tools, and has the best interface

Increase in atherosclerotic lesion size and wall thickening from 2 to 20 years in rats fed high-cholesterol and high-cholesterol plus bile acids. Rats fed a diet containing 16% cholesterol for as little as 2 years develop atherosclerosis. The purpose of the present study was to determine whether the thickening of atherosclerotic lesions is associated with increased lesion size in rats fed cholesterol for up to 20 years. Male Sprague-Dawley rats were fed one of two diets for up to 20 years: a diet containing 2% cholesterol and 1% cholic acid, or a diet containing 16% cholesterol and 2% cholic acid. Staining for macrophages was measured by standard histological techniques, lesion size was determined by planimetry, and lesion thickness was determined by electron microscopy. Over the 20-year study period, lesion size and wall thickening increased in each group. However, in the group fed 16% cholesterol for as little as 2 years, lesion size was not different from that of rats fed 16% cholesterol for 20 years. Lesion thickness increased from 1 micron at 2 years to 5 micron at 20 years, but lesion thickness was twice as thick in rats fed the 16% cholesterol diet for 2 years as in rats fed the 16% cholesterol diet for 20 years. Lesion size correlated with wall thickness in both groups. These results suggest that in rats fed an atherogenic diet, the increasing plaque size and wall thickness does not occur until after about 2 years. 7 8 1 8 , - 1 1 7 8 0 8 5 1 6 , - 1 5 3 9 9 6 4 8 2 ? - 2 7 3 3 3 5 1 3 0 W h a t i s t h e n e x t t e r m i n - 2 2 5 7 7 4 5 , - 4 5 1 5 4 8 9 , - 6 7 7 3 2 3 3 ,

What's New In?

The present invention relates generally to the fields of biochemical analysis and information retrieval. More particularly, the invention is directed to the screening of candidate drug compounds against biological target structures. Current drug discovery involves targeting biological molecules of importance (e.g. receptors, enzymes, toxins and other proteinaceous structures) or molecules whose biological behavior is aberrant (e.g. tumor cells). The hope is that the therapeutic activity of the resulting drugs will be based on their ability to affect specific target structures. In order to be able to screen such compounds in a high throughput fashion, a method must be established which allows for the rapid identification and, if possible, the efficient isolation and development of the targets. The development of truly "high throughput" screening methods requires highly automated and compact systems which permit the rapid parallel processing of many compounds against a single target. One such method for small molecule screening is the AlphaScreen.TM. technology (Tian et al., (1995) J. Am. Chem. Soc. 117:4684; Schwartz et al., (1996) PNAS 93:6344), in which covalent assembly or target-ligand or receptor-ligand complexes are detected by chemiluminescence. This procedure involves the preparation of a target-bound ligand of known concentration and amount of the biological target followed by the addition of a tagged compound library, usually containing the same ligand as the labeled target. The screening usually involves a series of steps, each being directed to one or more of: (1) ligand binding to the target, (2) high affinity ligand binding to the target, (3) whether the ligand-receptor interaction is specific and/or reversible, (4) displacement of bound ligand, and (5) effect of a ligand-receptor interaction on another function or property (e.g. biological activity). If there is a biological response to any compound in the screening, it is possible to identify the compound. Compounds of interest can be isolated by various means, depending on the particular biological activity desired. The AlphaScreen.TM. procedure and technology has been described in detail, (Abbott et al., (1999) PNAS 96(6): 3052-3057; Abbott et al., (2000) PNAS 97(20): 10969-10974). Another prior art procedure for small molecule screening is the Fluorescence Polarization.TM. (FP) assay (Davies et al., (1998) Bio
