pathogenetic correlation?]. The purpose of this study was to assess the rate of occurrence of oral cavity-specific microorganisms in children with recurrent tonsillitis. In a cross-sectional study, samples from patients were taken from the pharynx and the mouth. A comparison was made between the frequency of occurrence of Streptococcus intermedius, Streptococcus salivarius and Staphylococcus aureus, all facultative anaerobic organisms, and of Candida species, Candida albicans in particular, under normal clinical conditions with that of children treated for recurrent tonsillitis and a control group. Two hundred children in the study group and in the control group were subjected to routine oral cavity-specific microbiological examination. In the group with recurrent tonsillitis, a significantly higher incidence of Streptococcus intermedius ($p=0.03$) and Candida albicans

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an electrically conductive adhesive and an electrically conductive adhesive sheet, and more particularly to an electrically conductive adhesive for an electrode which is bonded to a semiconductor device such as a solar cell and a piezoelectric element for a sensor, and an electrically conductive adhesive sheet using the same. 2. Description of the Related Art An electrically conductive adhesive for use in an electrode of a semiconductor device such as a solar cell has been generally produced by applying a conductive primer, for example, to the surface of an electrode metal to be bonded to the semiconductor device, and then curing the resulting coating to form a conductive adhesive layer. The electrically conductive adhesive layer for the electrode used for the semiconductor device, which is exposed on the surface of the semiconductor device, has a high contact resistance. Therefore, in a case where a semiconductor device having an electrically conductive adhesive layer having a high contact resistance is used for a long time, the semiconductor device is caused to deteriorate, and in some cases, the semiconductor device cannot be used for a long period. To reduce the contact resistance, an electrically conductive adhesive layer with which metal particles are dispersed in the conductive adhesive layer has been proposed. In this case, however, the metal particles are distributed in the conductive adhesive layer, and therefore, the adhesion property with respect to the substrate is decreased. As a result, the adhesive layer peels off the substrate. On the other hand, an electrically conductive adhesive, which contains in the adhesive layer carbon black particles in addition to metal particles and is excellent in resistance against oxidation of the surface of an electrode to be bonded and adhesive property, has been proposed. However, in a
