Vidmore Blu-ray Monster.LONDON (Reuters) - Israel's prime minister said on Friday there were "no incidents" of killing civilians in airstrikes in Syria in recent days, but denied media reports that Israel had struck arms convoys earlier this week in northern Syria. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu speaks during a cabinet meeting in Jerusalem, Israel November 24, 2017. REUTERS/Alex Kolomoisky On Wednesday, the Russian Foreign Ministry said Israeli warplanes had carried out at least three strikes near the northern Syrian city of Hamidiyah on Tuesday, and hit a shipment of arms bound for Lebanon. Netanyahu in his statement on Friday did not say whether Israel had been involved in the strikes, and did not directly address the report. "Reports of recent incidents of the killing of innocent civilians in Syria are false," Netanyahu said. "Israel does not carry out strikes on Syria." Lebanese media reports cited Syrian sources on Thursday as saying two Syrian soldiers had been killed in the strikes and that arms convoys were hit in the incident. Syrian state media did not report the strike. Syrian President Bashar al-Assad in an interview with the Spanish newspaper El Mundo last year indicated that Israel was now "quietly" involved in supporting his military campaign against rebels. Israel's conflict with Iran-backed Syria and its arch-foe Hezbollah guerrillas has simmered for decades and Israeli warplanes have carried out hundreds of strikes since Syria's civil war started in 2011. Israel has always maintained it does not target shipments that it believes could carry arms to Hezbollah in neighboring Lebanon, which fought a devastating war with Israel in 2006. But in its attacks on Syria, which have killed hundreds of civilians in the past four years, Israel has frequently killed civilians. Asked if the new round of strikes in Syria was related to the strikes near Hamidiyah last week, Netanyahu said: "We are absolutely against any and all violence, but it is impossible to fight terrorism without striking at terrorists." His comments came a day after the United
