The first preview of the latest update to Adobe Flash Player, v. 18, was released on September 27. Two days later, on September 29, Adobe announced that the end of life of Flash Player v. 16 was projected for April 30, 2020. Here's the gist of the problem: Internet Explorer 11 (which introduced the concept of sandboxed browser extensions) is being deprecated starting January 1, 2020, and as part of that process, the browsing of other users' extensions on Internet Explorer will also be blocked. Extensions for Chrome and Firefox can continue to be used by users of these browsers, and continue to function as they always have. The security of your online banking, social media accounts and everyday browsing will be put at risk if you don't update your version of Flash, so I recommend you download and install the latest version of Flash Player by Adobe (for free) as soon as possible. Though you can't do it today, you can always try installing the current version on your computer, as shown in the video in this post. If the process looks as simple as it appears in the video, it's really not. If you have already successfully installed Flash Player before, a successful installation on a Windows 10 computer might look as follows: If the installation procedure creates a folder called "FlashPlayer" under C:\Program Files (x86)\Adobe\Flash\DirectX, it's safe to assume that Adobe Flash Player is correctly installed. Based on that assumption, the new Flash Player version will be stored in that folder. However, Adobe Flash is one of the most complex products that can be installed on computers. This includes not only traditional Windows applications, such as antivirus software, but also software bundles that may seem more like a collection of applications and a few files like the online storage service OneDrive. OneDrive is actually a Microsoft product, which provides a free online storage space for users of Windows

Mozilla chose to take advantage of the recent popularity of the social network to provide, together with the browser's toolbar, an entire homepage. It is a limited edition that only lasts for a week, but it is part of a series of new Firefox themes. With this theme, the Mozilla team decided to refresh the "upvotes" for all the posts that the Mozilla community made within the Reddit group, a privileged section of the network. All of these posts appear in the form of a horizontal bar in the menu bar. Users are encouraged to download the original Firefox theme and sync it with their system. If you are curious about the possibilities of the new theme, Mozilla has published several technical specifications, including a small comparison with the standard Firefox edition. One of the hallmarks is that these themes have access to the new "sidebar," which makes it possible to find a number of new extensions such as the "Mozilla extension" and the "Mozilla Add-on directory." Technical specifications of the new extension: - "side.contentWidget.contextMenus.upvotable"; - "tools.contextMenus.upvote.enabled"; - "toolbar.upvotable.updateOnStartup"; - ".upvotable.menuDisplayed"; These themes are currently available in the Mozilla Add-Ons Extension Manager. All of them are free, but some of them b7e8df5c8
