Q: What should a new employee do when interviewing for a new job? When interviewing for a new job should you follow all of the procedures as if you already are working at the company? Is it too presumptuous? I've started work at a company around two months ago and am still waiting on my start date. If someone were to walk in and interrupt an interview they would be pretty awkward. Or should I avoid the awkwardness and not set myself up for failure? A: You're hired to interview to earn a job, not to prove you'll do a good job. If you have established work history, and no gaps in employment or significant changes in qualifications, you should be able to interview without any formality. A: The title of the question is actually ambiguous. It could refer to the process of the interview or the process of being hired. While there are interview process that are specific for particular companies and you can follow them as if you already work there, there are other companies which are more like a start up and you should go through a number of interviews and get hired. I would say go through the interview process as if you were hired. You are there to check whether they want to offer the job, and it's a waste of time to waste time at first while there is no concrete answer. As it seems you are still waiting for the final paperwork you already passed the interview phase, I would suggest to go ahead and take the job. Just make sure that if they contact you in future, you will be prepared to answer. Lost on a Saturday Night Lost on a Saturday Night is a studio album by the band Dave Alvin and released in 1991. Home We are your heart people. Rajshri Thakur, our founder, started Hinduja Pathshala when she completed her post graduate program at Mumbai University in 2013. Before that she had attended Classes at her local college and worked in different jobs, including an internship with a publishing house in India. She realized that not many people were teaching full time to help their children study at home; however, everyone needs help when learning. When Rajshri Thakur started this, it was in a small way. Teaching a small group of children every week was a very gradual process but there were people who helped her along the way. One of the biggest changes in Pathshala is the way we teach through the heart. Rajshri knows that the easiest part of learning is to have love and support. If you teach through the heart, children will learn and remember very well. When you enroll your child in Pathshala you are giving them the love and support that will help them remember your lessons for life. Learning should be fun and to teach through the heart is the way to do this. Understanding at your child's level The focus of all of our lessons is understanding. By this, we mean understanding concepts, not rote learning, but understanding. When we teach, we teach what your child needs to understand. We do not teach books or concepts that children do not understand. We follow the same program, year after year, so that we have a solid understanding and theory on how to teach. We teach concepts and apply them, not knowledge that you can forget quickly. Theory and practice At Pathshala, we teach through practice. We start from the fundamental concepts and the fundamentals and we add the concepts that your child needs. At first, we start with rhythm, then counting and counting numbers, then simple reading, then phonics, then listening, then reading with comprehension. All of this in a very balanced manner so that your child does not get tired of learning. At Pathshala, we have covered and will continue to cover the whole concept of teaching. We teach by demonstration, one to one and in the group. Practice in these concepts is important because we do not want to be theoretical and not put into practice. We need your child's practice to help us understand what they are doing and to build our understanding. In the same manner, we teach practical skills to your
