Upgrade your Adobe Acrobat® X (formerly XE) experience with Adobe Acrobat® XI Pro. Adobe Acrobat XI Pro seamlessly .Q: Passing multiple variables to PHP script using AJAX I have two PHP scripts. One is to save comments to a database (updatedb.php) and the other is a page which echoes the details of the comments (detaildb.php). The user's input is supposed to get saved to the database when the submit button is clicked. The comments are printed when the user clicks the details button. It works in the sense that the comments get saved to the database when the user clicks the submit button. But at the same time, the page doesn't update to display the details of the comments. That is, the detail button does nothing. I think the problem has to do with the way I'm passing values from the submit button to the PHP

script. I have two options: AJAX and PHP.
Which one is the preferred way to achieve this? Here are my code snippets. the submit button: updatedb.php detaildb.php

I have an app that launches my own login screen to confirm an email address. Until iOS9 it was working fine. When ios9 comes into play it stops presenting the login screen. It displays the background of the app instead and then goes to the login screen, but then immediately goes back to the app. There is no error message that suggests its has failed to launch the login screen. Do i need to add something to the plist to force the login screen to appear or am i doing something in the source incorrectly?
