According to Gartner, the top five most-used photo editing tools are Adobe Photoshop, Adobe Lightroom, PhotoShop Elements, Affinity Photo, and Photoshop Express. In this article, we'll be covering the fastest tools to edit your photos and graphics with. Forbes recommends "iMovie for Windows, $20/£19.99." Although the app has been around for years, it's best for creating video and has great tools for editing photos. Plus, it's included with every Mac that comes with iMovie for iOS, so you can edit anything on your phone, with the same video editing tools. It also takes your photos and videos out of the app, so you can easily upload them to YouTube or your favorite social media. iMovie is a great photo editor, but it's not perfect. It's the only app you should consider if you're doing a lot of video editing and you don't have any experience. Edit a photo in Photoshop or Fireworks Photoshop is the best photo editor on the market, but it's not easy to learn. Luckily, Photoshop Elements is free and has all of the same features as Photoshop, but with a simpler user interface. Features such as "Smart layers" make editing photos fast and simple. Photoshop Elements also has features such as "Auto Smart Tone," "Adjust Color," and "Photo Match." Plus, the editor is super fast, so you can edit more images. You can even create graphics templates like a design mockup. With the help of Fireworks, you can also edit photos directly in the browser. After you've completed your editing, you can use the multiple sharing options to quickly get feedback from friends and family. Whether you're a professional or a hobbyist, Photoshop has a photo editing tool for you. If you're just starting out and need some training, we'll introduce you to the basics. How to Edit a Photo in Photoshop First, open the image you want to edit. Then, switch to the image editing tool. In Adobe Photoshop, the tools are located in the main menu bar, along with "Image" and "File" menus. 388ed7b0c7

Get breaking news alerts and special reports. The news and stories that matter, delivered weekday mornings. Despite climate change fears, there's still room for a snowy Valentine's Day. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration predicted on Tuesday that U.S. Atlantic coast cities will likely have "rare" to "probably no" coastal snow on Valentine's Day this weekend, including the New York metropolitan area. "Valentine's Day weather events are expected to be mostly on the warm side with scattered rain and snow showers on Thursday and Friday," the agency said in its latest winter outlook. New York City will likely have a morning frost along the southern and central coasts, with no snowfall. Forecasters expect a high of 40 degrees and a low of 37. In Washington, D.C., a "frosty morning" is likely for Valentine's Day, with a high of 37 degrees, according to the weather service. Let our news meet your inbox. The news and stories that matters, delivered weekday mornings. This site is protected by recaptcha The likelihood of a coastal snowstorm on the 13th is in the "very low" to "low" range for the entire week, according to the forecast for Valentine's Day and Thursday. Similarly, the odds of rain shower for the coastal Mid-Atlantic and Northeast areas "is in the low to moderate range." A snow storm watch is in effect for the coast of New Jersey and parts of Long Island on Thursday into Friday. The outlook said "large snow showers will likely occur" in the state of Maryland on Valentine's Day. As for the rest of the nation, there is "near normal" precipitation across the middle and northern tier of the United States, with some local precipitation amounts in the middle and upper-Midwest well above average. What's New In?

Intel (NASDAQ: INTC) said its best-selling Core 2 Duo desktop processor would likely be its last production based on the processor core architecture used in the desktop processor. The company said it will therefore focus on desktop processors based on the newer Core i architecture that would support larger memory bandwidth. Core 2 Duo processors will continue to be produced in volume until mid-2010. The Core 2 Duo's manufacturing process uses higher yields of processors resulting in lower prices. While the Core 2 Duo has helped make Intel's PC business profitable, it has done little to boost profits at Intel Corporation. Two years ago, Intel increased the size of its microprocessor die. The size increase helped make the Core 2 Duo and Core 2 Duo E7800 the most popular processors available. Intel's new Core i processors will have lower yields leading to higher prices. Aside from manufacturing complexity, Intel has been criticized for not adding enough cores to modern processors. With fewer cores, Intel's new desktop processors are expected to have a higher TDP (thermal design power) than the Core 2 Duo. Intel said the new Core i processors are expected to have half the TDP of the Core 2 Duo. Intel's Desktop Architecture is used in both the laptop and desktop computer segments. The mobile version is faster than its desktop counterpart due to the lack of supporting drivers. Intel is already preparing for a transition of its desktop processor business, including plans for a late 2009 launch of its next generation of desktop processors, dubbed "Clarkdale," which are expected to use a 9-nanometer manufacturing process. Management of type 2 diabetes in primary care: patient's perspective. To assess self-management of type 2 diabetes in a primary care setting and identify barriers and facilitators of patients' self-management. Qualitative study using grounded theory. Patients of type 2 diabetes registered at a primary care center were included by a convenience sampling. Semistructured interviews were conducted. Transcripts were analyzed using the constant comparative method. Thirty-eight interviews were conducted. Two coding categories were identified: using self-management and perceived barriers and facilitators. The main barriers to the use of self-management were perceived coexisting diseases and their symptoms, severity of diabetes, type of diabetic treatment, and beliefs in its efficacy. The main facilitators were living in a healthy environment, family support, and adequate
