The Window The most important aspect of Photoshop is the window, which displays all the images you create. To Photoshop, any new image you create is simply a new layer. An image is made up of layers, and once you create a layer, you can add more to it, as described in the upcoming sections. Also, to control the way images appear on a page, you typically work with a single image in the Window at a time. To do this, you have to set Photoshop's main window to the image you want to work with; opening another image and working with that image affects the image in the Window only. (In other words, you can't have two images open at the same time when you're working with one of them.) If you want to work with multiple images at one time, you have to create a new Photoshop document for each image you want to work with. (A document is a single image file, similar to a page in a magazine or a page in a book.) This extra layer of window work is cumbersome, but it lets you work with multiple images at the same time, which can be a real boon in an image-editing task.

Let's Look at It... The brush is a useful tool for retouching photos. However, it is not only limited to photography. You can also use it for painting, inks, and many other effects. Let's look at some of the different brushes in Photoshop:

- * Clone Stamp : This is one of the most important tools in Photoshop. It allows you to copy pixels, and this is useful for repairing, compositing and more.
- * Spatter Stroke : This is a fancy brush. This is good if you need to add texture to your images.
- * Brush Tip : This is another brush type. You can use this if you need to simulate liquid colors.
- * Brush : This is a polygonal brush. You can use this to create a clean edge on drawings.
- * Airbrush : This is another brush type. If you need to draw smoke or a mist on a photo, this is a great brush.
- * Marquee Brush : This is a brush with a scallop edge. You can use it to easily create a drawing with a good look.
- * Brush Tip : This is another brush type. If you need to simulate liquid colors in ink, you can use this brush.

What's New in the?

Palo Altino Palo Altino was born in São Paulo, Brazil, has lived in Vancouver, Canada, for the past 20 years and is a professional 'disc jockey,' a local term for DJ or Disc Jockey. For those unfamiliar with the terminology, a DJ is the person who mixes the songs for a concert or event, and there is a specific set of rules and definitions that they must follow. While some DJs are hired to mix a live performance, other DJs play in a "full-time" capacity for major recording artists and the like. Palo Altino was raised in a middle-class family and was first introduced to music at age three, listening to a portable cassette player, only realizing it wasn't real when his relatives told him it was. At eight he got his first real radio, picking up on the classic rock format and the "shock of Sound". He started out by playing guitar, later switching to the trumpet. At age ten he became fascinated with the music that surrounded him. He recalls "I was doing garage bands and playing in a pickup band with instruments, and we tried to get into concerts and festivals. I was always into music." Palo Altino attended Skidmore College in New York, where he earned a degree in management, a move that was influenced by becoming a DJ. Afterwards he returned to Vancouver and landed a job as a technical intern with a British Columbia-based record label called Cooperative Distribution, learning the business end of the music industry. He cites this as the "best educational experience I've had so far in my life" and credits the experience for exposing him to so many things he might not have seen otherwise. He began studying sound engineering at Queen's University, obtaining an undergraduate degree. One of his instructors was the famous Canadian artist Michel Pagliaro, who took him under his wing, encouraging him to pursue music as an art rather than a business. As a DJ and entertainer, Palo's now a big name in the Vancouver music scene, having played with many groups throughout his career. He is currently a member of the band NYRO, along with Hugh Marsh, formerly of The Paupers, and Bruce Fairbairn, of The Doug MacLean Project. They play a pop and rock inspired music that ranges from soft and gentle to heavy and passionate. On August 5th,
