judgement apparatus, a

lane-change judgement method and a lane-change judgement program for a vehicle, which causes the vehicle to change lanes. 2.

Description of the Related Art JP-A-2004-256675 is an example of a conventional technology relating to this kind of lane-change judgement apparatus. According to the teachings of JP-A-2004-256675, a decision is made as to whether or not the vehicle is currently changing lanes. If the decision is that the vehicle is not currently changing lanes, the decision is that the vehicle is not currently changing lanes. If the decision is that the vehicle is currently changing lanes, the decision is that the vehicle is currently changing lanes. When there is doubt as to whether or not the vehicle is currently changing lanes, the vehicle is either caused to change lanes or is not caused to change lanes

But one trend in particular is going to change the nature of those orders — delivery. That, along with a sluggish auto industry and a still-stubborn housing market, are taking their toll. Online and mobile shopping are among the top growth areas for online retailers this year. PepsiCo PEP, -0.18% and its Sam's Club warehouse club arm last month will create a new e-commerce platform for Sam's Club goods to drive incremental sales growth. Sam's Club expects the new service will provide Sam's Club members a mobile shopping experience. It will offer this new service at stores on both Radioguided occult tumor localisation and surgery in colorectal cancer patients. Precise tumour localisation is important to spare the normal tissue around tumour and improve outcome. This study aimed to evaluate the usefulness of radioguided occult tumour localisation (ROLL) for colorectal cancer (CRC). We retrospectively analysed the usefulness of radioguided occult tumour localisation for CRC patients, who underwent colorectal resection at University Hospital, Rijeka, between April 2011 and March 2014. Each patient was examined preoperatively by the scan described in the method. We recorded the number of the detected tumours by using the radioguided approach, the number of the detected occult tumours by performing surgery and postoperative histopathological examination, local recurrence, and the postoperative outcome. We evaluated the amount of bowel resection (per cent of the bowel) and the tumour invasion. Fifty-six patients with CRC were examined. The tumour was detected by the scan in 43 patients (sensitivity = 77.1%). Ten patients (sensitivity = 17.9%) had their resection on the basis of radioguided approach. By performing surgery, 19 patients (sensitivity = 32.8%) with CRC were found. The sensitivity of the approach was 88.1% (19/21). The respective number of detected and occult tumours were 1 and 7 (spatial sensitivity = 50%). The specificity was 80%. By the end of the observation time, no local recurrence was recorded. The advantage of the radioguided approach is that it increases the spatial sensitivity. Furthermore, it decreases the amount of the bowel resection. Surgeons may find out the occult tumours that were not found by using the usual radiographic examinations. In addition, the approach may identify recurrent tumours, which may suggest that the time for salvage surgery is preferable for these patients. Q: How to
