anatomageinvivo5fullfree.torrent Anatomageinvivo5fullfree.xml Anatomageinvivo5fullfree.zip Presenter and digitalist Thomas Kersting works with audio, video and content for advertising and web. In the last years Thomas has written and directed a number of web films and copy for music and his credits are increasingly on films and TV. Thomas likes to use an old camcorder and camera for his projects. A good camera gives a true sense of a subject, whether it is a person or a situation. He finds the right camera and level of quality and then, sometimes, improvises. He can shoot a whole video in one day from concept to finished product. Presenting can be hard and Thomas finds that the focus and craftsmanship are key to a strong work. Thomas has been teaching filmmaking workshops for decades in Germany and the US. He is member of Make Video Film (MVF), the International Filmmakers Collective, has won the International Film Jury in the 2011 Festival Berlin, and has taught at the University of Freiburg, in this post we'll explore the distinction between the ideas of risk and uncertainty in the context of security. What is Risk? "Risk" is a worrying word in the language of life. If we say that someone's chances of getting the flu are 50/50, that immediately conjures up images of lottery winnings. In fact, in probability theory, the definition of "risk" is quite simple. A gamble is a probabilistic process with two possible outcomes. The outcome of the process is known with certainty, and each outcome is equally likely to occur. These are probabilities of occurrence and not of certain events! In the lottery for example, you win 50% of the time, and lose 50% of the time. So how can it be that we use the word "risk" to mean "uncertainty"? It is a subtle point, but in the context of security threats, the term "risk" necessarily connotes insecurity, uncertainty, doubt. It seems to be built into the concept. Look at this excerpt from the MIT 2002 model of "risk": "In the context of business models, [risk] is any scenario, includ
