When you're ready to start photography, you can work with the program with a couple of simple steps: 1. Open a template for the type of photography you want to take. You can choose from the default templates or create your own. You can find a template at the start of the program. 2. Create a new document and open the template. Any tools that are available in the default templates are already available in the menu bar when you select a document. You'll find the _File_ and _Edit_ menus next to the Quick Open and Open dialog boxes. 3. Choose a lens for the camera. The Format panel offers a simple place to select your camera's lens. Click the Info button and the Format panel displays lens and focal length information, such as the focal length of a 35mm lens. 4. Make sure the light meter option is set to Kelvin. This option is available under the Setup menu, Edit. After you're in the proper exposure mode, read the last number on the exposure compensation scale (or the light meter reads) to calculate the exposure. Kelvin is the white point setting for the light meter. 5. Select the main toolbox on the left side of the screen. Press the F key to open the small palette at the top of the program window. 6. Move the white rectangle tool onto the left side of the document window, over the blue screen until you see a little white box appear. You are now ready to create the scene and add a photo to it. # Focusing before you shoot You can use any lens on any camera to shoot photos. But, with certain types of lenses and cameras, you need to focus correctly before you take the shot. To focus, you need to align the _focusing screen_ in the viewfinder or on the sensor. Follow these steps to find out how to align the focusing screen on your camera. ## Aligning the Focusing

Q: AngularJS different/multiple controllers and common services I have an AngularJS application in which I have a layout page, which I want to be loaded first and then the other views should load at the click of link. These views contain several modules/controller and each module has a separate service that it needs to be initialized at the click of the link (as it requires a different environment). I followed the following tutorial, but I can't get it to work: The above article explains my problem. In my case: - I have a home.html (layout), that I want to be loaded first, with its own controller and main service and then the other views should load at the click of a button. - The views itself have their own module and service(s) Here is a minimal example of how I am trying to do this: view.html Hello World! page.html Hello World! home.html

Abstract US President Barack Obama recently asserted that the US will “remain resolutely committed to strengthening the global climate change regime” (Presidential Statement on International Climate Change, The United States is not only the largest and fastest growing greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions producer and consumer but also one of the principal negotiators of the UNFCCC. Thus, the Obama administration’s statement has important implications for the UNFCCC process. In this article, I use the GHG emission performance of the United States to analyze the policies aimed at promoting a transition to a low-carbon economy. I argue that the United States would need to reduce its emissions by 80% by 2050 to be in line with its commitment to the UNFCCC. The US can reduce emissions by a factor of two through the adoption of a range of policies such as the adoption of a cap-and-trade policy, establishing a price on carbon, eliminating subsidies for energy consumption, expanding renewable energy sources, and increasing energy efficiency. Introduction The current political scene in the US has led to a new debate on climate change, as President Obama recently asserted, “We will continue to do our part and play by our own rules, even as we help other nations find their own ways to reduce their emissions and help deal with the threat of climate change. We can, and we must, lead this effort” (Presidential Statement on International Climate Change, The new climate policy that Obama announced is in line with his predecessor’s policy. While the
