She asked me to come to her house because she's a school teacher. I asked her if she was married. She said that she was divorced. She told me that she had a 12-year old daughter. She said that I should be careful with her daughter. I sent her 1,000 usd. I didn't meet her daughter. I just sent money. I don't think that I should have met her daughter as well. EMERGENCY TOURISM Emergency tourism is a well-established method to showcase/enhance a country's tourism industry, when the government allows it in an economic crisis. The word "emergency", as we know, implies a sudden change of circumstances in a country, which causes confusion and panic among people. The effects of this panic/confusion tend to cause a dip in the number of visitors to the country. Examples of tourism emergency tourism include, but are not limited to: BUDGET CRISIS When a country's budget is wiped out or significantly cut back on, especially during a recession, emergency tourism is the best marketing tool for the country to attract tourists. The beauty of this kind of emergency tourism is that it saves the government the effort and money it would have taken to advertise/market the country in a non-emergency mode. Besides, tourism is a great source of income, thus in the short term, emergency tourism can be the key to the country's economy. FINANCIAL CRISIS Financial crisis, also known as a banking crisis, is similar to a financial emergency. But, where financial emergency causes a dip in the economy, financial crisis causes a dip in the banking system. It can affect tourism to a country which depends heavily on its banking sector. This kind of crisis makes most people reluctant to engage in any type of investment or activity which requires them to move money. So, effectively, those who usually travel and spend money are the ones who get affected first. WORLD WAR World War can be seen as an emergency tourism, in the sense that it causes a dip in tourism in the country where the war takes place. World War II is a notable example of an emergency tourism. CURRENCY TROUBLE A currency crisis happens when the government can't sustain the value of its currency. The country's economy will start to suffer because of the currency's depreciation. This is where emergency tourism can do its job, by bringing in more visitors and spending money for a country, which is experiencing a currency crisis. These are not the only kinds of emergency tourism. Depending on the environment and the culture of the country, other emergency tourism can be adopted.Q: ruby: opening a file during runtime I'm trying to open a file in runtime, here's my code. file = File.new("/
