Dosimetric effects of needle-electrode offset on dose distributions in transanal ultrasonography. Ultrasound is increasingly used for guidance in radiation therapy of rectal malignancies. In this study, dosimetric effects of needle-electrode offset on dose distributions in rectal ultrasound (US) were simulated and compared to those found in magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) for radiation treatment planning. US images acquired with zero (i.e., no offset) and clinically relevant offsets of 0.5, 1.0, and 1.5 cm were compared with MRI in 3D and in axial slice planes to a digitally reconstructed radiograph (DRR) of the calibrated volumes. Dose distributions were simulated for needle-electrode pairs of 5 mm in diameter and length and needle-electrode offsets of 0 to 3 cm. With no offset, the US and DRR values were virtually identical, demonstrating the validity of US-based dose calculation. With an offset, the US dose distribution, particularly for small fields, differed in 3D and in axial slice planes. For US, the dose was overestimated at the tips of the electrode by up to 14% (in the 3D plane) and for large fields by 2.1% (in the axial plane), whereas for the MRI, the dose was underestimated by 0.5% (3D) and 0.4% (axial). The use of clinical US offset values reduces patient-specific dose errors in treatment planning and improves the accuracy of dose calculations.A Group Home, an Assisted Living Facility, or Just a Nice Place to Live? When someone goes into a nursing home, they are not an employee of the nursing home, but a resident who receives services from the nursing home to give them a comfortable living environment. The residents in a nursing home are also called residents, and this includes the medical patients who receive services from nursing homes. The nursing home is where a resident lives, and it is a place that provides convenience, comfort, security, and accessibility for the residents and their families. Most of the time, the nursing home is also a nonprofit organization, and it is not a business for profit. A nursing home is not even a company, it is an organization that provides a safe and comfortable environment for the disabled, elderly, and medical patients. The reason why nursing homes are nonprofit organizations is because they are not run like a regular company, and they have the same

Hylocharis scalaris Hylocharis scalaris, the grey-winged green, is a species of narrow-winged damselfly in the family Coenagrionidae. It is found in the Caribbean Sea, Central America, North America, and South America. Habitat They are sometimes found near fresh water. Biology The male is the smaller of the two sexes, long. The female is larger, long. A study of their mating habits found them to be more aggressive, and to be territorial during the season they mate. Habitat They can be found in ponds and marshes at altitudes above sea level. It is common in the Petén Lake area of Guatemala. References Category:Coenagrionidae Category:Insects described in 1837BENGALURU: Out of the seven Lok Sabha constituencies that will go to polls in Karnataka on May 12, two are being fought out by the Congress and three by the JD (S). In the constituencies where the two parties contesting elections are at loggerheads, the Congress has resorted to a fourth level of strategy — 'bidding' for votes. Some of the information accessed by TOI, shows that in Bidar Lok Sabha constituency of Karnataka, the Congress has allied with a new political party called Karnataka Janata Paksha (KJP), which is closely associated with the opposition Janata Dal (Secular), led by K Janaka, their former alliance partner in the previous Lok Sabha. This appears to be the first attempt of the Congress in Karnataka to align with a political party to target votes. Sources said the Congress, in a "helpful" gesture to the JDS, is even working with the current MPs of the party who may be re-elected. In such constituencies, "helpful" MPs are expected to carry the party's flag and not the individual candidate. At the Lok Sabha level, in Karnataka, Congress has 11 MPs, while JDS has one MP. Sources said so far, the Congress has not signed any agreement for alliance. But sources said that the alliance for MP and MLA seats of Bidar, Moodabidre and Belgavi is likely. While these constituencies are represented by Congress leaders -- M B Patil, S Ramesh and Pankaj Advani -- the
