Q: Is there a hack for the failwhale to be less odious? Is there a way to reduce the text of the failwhale to something more tolerable, or maybe a simple solution to stop seeing it at all, without deleting it? Obviously I can't bother with a flat out edit, but perhaps the failure to notice that it's in the image could just be notened, or the image that popups could be drawn on a mask (like the standard way to achieve a background image). A: The only way I can think of to make it more tolerable is to file a feature-request on SE to disable the entire page when a question fails to generate any up-votes, or at least to make the text less prominent and annoying. However, you have other options available to you. You can upvote the question yourself, which will "reset" the post's reputation and causes the question to become un-highlighted, thus not ruining the page. You can edit the question to add back a link to point to the more basic, less obnoxious close reason. A: Personally, I don't think this is particularly important. It's not something that I'm particularly offended by, nor is it something that I find makes me want to avoid the site. When a question receives a close vote, it's up to that voter to accept or reject the close vote, depending on the reasoning they cited for closing. If they don't like the style of a specific close reason, then they have the choice of leaving a comment under the close reason to explain why they reject the close. Obviously, this isn't a walk-in-the-park type of close vote, but it's up to the voters to explain why they are voting to close the question. Personally, I'm not interested in the event that a question received 10 upvotes before it received a single close vote. It makes no difference to me why the question received 10 upvotes before it was closed, or how any one close vote was cast. If 10 voters gave it 10 upvotes, so be it. If you think the question is on-topic, or has some redeeming quality, then upvote it. Personally, I wouldn't expect someone to click the "Not Constructive" close reason every time they flagged a question as off-topic. It would be the

Q: Pushing from multiple Git repositories in the same local git repo Git is a huge, HUGE topic and I'm not in a position to learn it. I'm a php developer, and fairly new to version control. I have multiple git repositories and I'm trying to merge some of them into one repository, but I'm having trouble since some of them use the same files. I have tried creating a single repository first, then cloning them (using git clone) into the same local git repo, but for some reason, pushing all the repositories was rejected. I'm using a MacBook with Mountain Lion and I'm using XCode, and Git Kobo. Is there a way to do this? A: I've solved this issue and will leave this question for anyone who is interested. I was having a hard time getting all the source codes from a directory and placing them all together in one repository. I was able to do this using git clone and then switching branches. In my branch i switched to all the sources and used git checkout master, to switch back to the previous branch. I can see why you guys are worried about the size of the repository but I only pushed a few of the repositories to Heroku, and will be adding more when the time comes. I hope this helps someone! 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to electrical contacts and more particularly to electrical contacts having a hot gas resistant body and a method of fabricating the same. 2. Prior Art As illustrated in FIGS. 1a-1b, conventional electrical contacts have a hollow cylindrical substrate 10 coated with a hot gas resistant polymer 12. A refractory metal conductor 14, usually made from molybdenum, is embedded in the polymer 12 and the polymer 12 over the conductor 14 is molded into a cylindrical cap 16. There are two problems with the conventional electrical contact. First, the hot gas resistant polymer 12 has a certain amount of permeability to the ambient gas and thus, the hot gas resistant properties of the contact are not entirely satisfactory. Second, the conductive metal is exposed and thus the contact is sensitive to oxidation. A drawback of the conventional electrical contact is due to the nature of the hot gas resistant polymer 12. The shape of the polymer 12 is defined by the shape of the mold that is used to cast the material. In the case of an electrical contact for a rapidly moving
