FIFA is a series of association football video games and has had great success in the past. More than 50 million people already own a Fifa game. The game lets players assume the role of a professional football player, as well as challenge friends, and colleagues. FIFA games have long been an important part of Microsoft's business thanks to their Xbox 360's cult popularity. FIFA is also a big deal for Electronic Arts, with the company buying up licences to make FIFA games for consoles and PC for the last 25 years. This collection of facts and figures about FIFA tells us a lot about the game and how its come along over the years. FIFA takes the game to new heights FIFA 21 is here now, but we really should have thought of this during all those years we were waiting. All this was a long time coming, with FIFA making the jump from 2D graphics to full 3D in FIFA 13 in 2013. And to keep up with modern-day players, FIFA 11 also included a new footspeed system. With more realistic footwork, players were able to run as fast and as far as before. FIFA on mobile The rise of smartphones and tablets is something of a trend in the computer games industry - big, mainstream games like Call of Duty have their own dedicated mobile versions. EA can also claim it's the first football game to run on mobile phones, in FIFA 14 for Android and iOS. EA Sports announced the FIFA Mobile app as a spin-off in 2014, although this wasn't until long after the full game was out on mobile. That means people have to jump between FIFA and FIFA Mobile (and FIFA Ultimate Team) - although the mobile version does include a full football engine, so it should still feel identical. Technology for new heights This was a big year for new technology on the game - with the introduction of a first-person mode, which meant players could actually see what they were about to do in first person.
