So, given that, I am curious as to how do we know that it is infinite? A: Universe is the only term in our scientific understanding of the nature of reality that is infinite. To quote the Wikipedia article: In cosmology and physics, the term "multiverse" (or occasionally "oscillating multiverse") is used to refer to a hypothetical existence of a large (in comparison with the size of the observable universe) number of universe branches (called "pocket universes" or "hypersurfaces", "pocket dimensions" or "multiverse-like spaces") that can be accessed from the observable universe and which are characterized by different physical laws. The Universes are infinite because there exists no limit to the number of Universes that we can conceive of. What does "infinite" mean? (Consider human knowledge). We know at least one Universe: Our own. Many other Universes: No limit to the number of universes. We do not know exactly how many Universes there are. We can only observe some of them and calculate the number from that limited set. In the case of the Multiverse, we can only conjecture how many there are but there are many suggestions. 1cdb36666d
