Lignin-binding peptides (LBP) are novel agents that function by binding to the cell surface and being internalized. In this study, we produced an LBP in bacteria, designated as AES-67, and assessed the characteristics of AES-67 and its ability to inhibit the growth of cancer cells. We also evaluated the potential of AES-67 to sensitize cancer cells to conventional chemotherapy agents. AES-67 induced apoptosis in cervical cancer cells. In addition, it synergistically enhanced the cytotoxicity of cisplatin, a widely used anticancer agent, and 5-fluorouracil (5-FU), a promising new agent. It also potentiated the cytotoxicity of the aforementioned drugs to normal cells. Our findings indicate that AES-67 may be a potent anticancer agent for cervical cancer and warrants further investigation. Günther Jauch (1912–1977) was a German actor.
