A: The author offers to purchase the keys by PayPal (payment method 2 in wxHangMan). After completing a payment, the author will send an email with keys. In case of a failed payment, the author simply refuses to send keys. The email does not have an obviously valid date of sending, but for some weird reasons, it has an automatically-generated date as of 2016-11-14. This should be good, but because the author simply refuses to send a valid email address (the contact information field), it's not possible to receive a valid email. A: I found more scam emails with exact same pattern like this. Author is trying to sale key for various email registrars and spyware/crapware/malware packers (WiX, bundler). The keys seem to be stolen and can be used for any warez/trojan horse. Well, the keys seems to be intended for Winrar or Winzip. What do you think about this? A federal court in Virginia Friday ruled that CVS Caremark LLC may move forward with its plan to rebrand under the name of its drug store rival, CVS Pharmacy. According to the court, CVS's plan to rebrand won't cause confusion to consumers because the two are simply too different. As the WSJ's Nikkei Asian Review reports, the court ruled that CVS's plan to rebrand, which was already approved by the Federal Trade Commission, must now be finalized by the Justice Department's Antitrust Division. The FTC does not approve new brand names for large companies. CVS announced its intention to rebrand last month and said the rebranding process, which includes a new logo and slogan, has already been approved by the Federal Trade Commission. But the Justice Department's Antitrust Division opposed the plan to rebrand d0c515b9f4 caption The vote is being held under emergency "suspension" of the three-day sitting MPs have voted by 322 to 309 to back a "meaningful vote" on Brexit. The government's motion, which would allow MPs to vote in another, or same, motion on the Brexit deal Mrs May has already agreed, was passed on Monday. But the Commons' scrutiny of the deal was then "suspended" for three days, meaning the planned vote - a day later than planned - cannot take place. Labour leader Jeremy Corbyn accused the government of "running down the clock". Shadow Brexit Secretary Keir Starmer said the prime minister had "failed woefully on her deal". The vote by MPs on Monday would have been the last one in the current session. The motion, tabled by backbencher Oliver Letwin, said the government should "continue seeking to secure an agreement in the national interest". Conservative Sir Oliver, who lost his father in the second world war, said Mrs May had made "no secret" she was prepared to sacrifice the UK's place in the single market in return for a deal. image caption Labour leader Jeremy Corbyn said the government was "running down the clock" and giving MPs an "impossible choice" Labour MP Stephen Kinnock said the motion was "a gift to the Tories". Mr Corbyn called on the government "to rule out no deal" and "unlock the key elements" of the Brexit deal, which he said was "not a done deal". Amber Rudd, the former work and pensions secretary, told MPs that they did not want to
