Thioredoxin 1 (Trx1) is a ubiquitous oxidoreductase that plays a pivotal role in the detoxification of oxidative stress. To be active, the enzyme is present in a reduced form and is easily activated by redox. We investigated the presence of Thioredoxin 1 (Trx1) and its regulatory protein (Trx1 reductase) in human normal and pathologic heart tissues and a cardiomyopathic cell line. In samples from patients with ischemic heart disease, we found immunoreactive protein and mRNA for both Thioredoxin 1 and Trx1 reductase. Conversely, the samples from patients with dilated cardiomyopathy were negative for both. It is suggested that the increased levels of Thioredoxin 1 in ischemic heart disease are linked to an adaptive response to adverse conditions and might help reduce oxidative stress in cardiac muscle cells. The overexpression of Trx1 reductase in dilated cardiomyopathy could also be useful in regulating oxidative stress in this process. Q: How can I execute callback only when the first request ends?
