A retrospective review of all isolates of Streptococcus pneumoniae in the central Israel district from January 1992 to December 1998 was performed. During this period, 88.6% of all isolates of S. pneumoniae in Israel were recovered from hospitalized patients. All isolates were tested for their susceptibility to antimicrobial agents. Of the 1,500 isolates of S. pneumoniae, 100 (6.8%) were considered clinically relevant. The predominant serogroups were 23F, 6B, 19F, and 23B, while serogroups 14, 15, and 18 were rare. Among the clinical isolates, trimethoprim-sulfamethoxazole resistance rates varied between 44.8 d0c515b9f4
