The Fremont HS P930 is a nice benchtop spectrophotometer that will fit in most lab notebooks. It's as portable as it is versatile, and it offers an affordable price-point for folks new to UV-vis spectrophotometry. Below, we've provided a list of what we love about the P930, and what features to consider when you shop for a benchtop spectrophotometer. The John C. Fremont HS P930 is a benchtop spectrophotometer that will fit in most lab notebooks. Image: RR Donnelly. First up, let's talk about its best feature: it's modular. Most benchtop spectrophotometers are designed for head-to-head use, where your instrument is attached to the front of your bench top. The Fremont HS P930, however, is designed to fit alongside most lab notebooks. Most of its components are hidden away, so it has a small footprint and won't take up much space. When you put the P930 alongside your lab notebook, it functions just like any other spectrophotometer. The P930 comes with an oven thermometer, cuvette rack, and pre-set sample volume. You can change the sample volume, but it's not yet programmable. It does, however, have a temperature-controlled cooling system, and we

Native Instruments has designed a ton of favorite instruments and plugins for processing the guitar. Tonic guitar processing plugins and tutorials will teach you how to turn your guitar into a keyboard. Tonic is our favorite plugin for using a guitar as an MIDI controller. Control of voltage-gated potassium channels in venous and arterial myocytes from rat cerebral cortex. The characteristics of the voltage-gated K⁺ current (K_v) in myocytes freshly isolated from the pial surface of the adult rat cerebral cortex were investigated using whole-cell voltage clamp. K_v channels were classified into three types based on their voltage-dependent inactivation and blockade by intracellular QX-314 and TEA. Type I K_v channels are activated at membrane potentials more negative than -55 mV, whereas type II K_v channels are activated at membrane potentials more positive than -60 mV. Type III K_v channels, activated at membrane potentials of more negative than -80 mV
