PH - <https://www.good2gether.com/Video/GeminiGold>, an iBeacon-powered identity verification tool from Gemalto, last week held its second DemoCamp Hackathon in Sydney with the tagline, "The Evolving Identity Ecosystem." It's not often that a publicly traded company like Gemalto, a $6.7bn electronics and IT security company, says, "The Evolving Identity Ecosystem," so I'm intrigued. What could Gemini Gold tell me about the evolving identity ecosystem that Mark Zuckerberg and others are fumbling around? At DemoCamp, Gemalto demonstrated how users could plug their mobile phone into an iBeacon and be checked for their identity credentials against the public directory of government agencies, via their mobile phone. Perhaps the iBeacons could soon replace the phones once used to make electronic transactions and we could use the iBeacons in shops and cafes as a means of verifying our identities and payment methods when we buy something. This is the sort of thing I could imagine, if I could still be amazed by two-factor authentication techniques. In this age, however, it seems like a trivial way to verify identities. The Personal verification of users for their mobile phone identifiers and payment methods is one of the largest and fastest growing segments of the mobile payments market. The use of mobile phones as the primary authentication method has been growing exponentially year-over-year and is expected to reach some $40
