The text layer is the most important layer in Photoshop. If you cannot modify the text layer, you will not be able to edit or modify your images effectively. Without the text layer, you have no text. Similarly, the background layer is important. You cannot edit an image without a background. The Other Files in Your Image The term raw means that the image was not adjusted for anything, such as brightness, contrast, or color. Although the raw image might appear very basic, it actually includes quite a bit of information that, when considered with other aspects of the image, yields much more clarity. In addition, a raw file is a more accurate representation of the original subject than an image that has been processed through the editing features in Photoshop. The following tips can assist in your image-editing journey: When you open an image, the original is in a separate file from the processed image. Therefore, all modifications made to the original file affect the original image, whereas any changes to the processed image affect only the processed image. Don't be confused when you see the file extension on your image file, such as.psd. The.psd extension relates to the Photoshop software; it is used by the software to distinguish between a processed image file and an original image file. If you open an image without opening the raw file, you may end up editing that raw file later. Therefore, it's best to start with a raw file and do your edits in a separate file. After you shoot a photograph, you should always process it through the Adobe Bridge or Photoshop software. If you don't do so, when you move to another machine, the file will look different on the new computer. Therefore, this final step enables you to work on the image on different machines without having to take the time to re-edit it. Always save your final edited image to a separate location. If you work on a laptop while you travel or move your images from one computer to another computer, you should save a copy of your image to the hard drive on the other machine. You never know when you might need that original image again, and you don't want to have to do all the editing again. Staying in Style As you edit your photographs, sometimes the images you create can take on a "vanishing point" look. That is, the subject appears to be receding in the background, as if it were a mirage. To bring the image

We are planning to use the following reasoning in arriving at the conclusion that he simply did not arise to such status. The appellants complain that the introduction of the marriage certificate by the appellee was improper because of the non-probability of the marriage, as shown by the fact that the appellant denied he was married. The position taken by the appellee is that that instrument is admissible under the policy of the common law rule which makes a marriage a judicial admission against interest. The appellee says that the fact that the appellant, plaintiff in the action, denied that he was married does not make the marriage certificate, proof of the marriage. The appellee also, in defense of the introduction, contends that the appellant in the action, on the trial, did not deny the marriage, but merely argued on *702 the issue of the cause of death, and was under oath at the trial. "Where a person admits in court that he is married and his testimony is given in direct conflict with such admission, the testimony of the admission is, in the absence of some equitable defense, deemed conclusive upon the court; it is a judicial admission. It is true that the validity of a marriage may sometimes depend on extrinsic evidence, but if the question is raised, it can be determined by the court as a matter of judicial notice, which the court may take judicial notice of the fact. * * *" (Citations omitted.) (Emphasis supplied.) "A judicial admission is a formal act done in the course of judicial proceedings which is a substitute for evidence, thereby waiving the right of the party to introduce evidence on the issue, and it removes the issue from the field of controversy. * * *" (Citations omitted.) In the instant case the appellant in the cause did deny at the trial that he was married to the appellee. In addition to this he made reference to the facts and circumstances attending his marriage by stating: "I knew that she was married and I believed she was of age." The causes of death were stipulated by the appellant. One cause was emphysema and the other hypertension. It is true that on one occasion in the course of the trial the appellant did allude to the husband-wife status of his deceased wife, and made the following statement: "What in the world would make it of any concern of mine if I am married to someone else and I thought she was of age and I still found out that she
