After applying that patch, I was able to boot up the game on Windows 10's Fast startup feature and it was running perfectly. Instead of the square that players used to start and stop their shadows in Pharlap, there was a nice semi circle that spanned the entire screen and had the starting point of the shadow. When you played in the first person view, you could no longer see your shadow. All of that changes in the massive patch included in the game's second update, version 1.0.1.0. On Saturday October 16th, 2018 and continuing on through November 24th, 2018, it was announced that the developer's beta period for the Patch 1.0.1.0 update would close on October 30th, 2018. All players who have the game installed must update to Patch 1.0.1.0 in order to continue playing the game. The developers also announced that the Patch 1.0.1.0 update would be released on November 30th, 2018. Here's the problem with the patch: the background picture has changed. When you load up the game for the first time, it has a nice red and blue sky, blue water, and multi-colored trees and plants. But when you actually play the game, it shows a sad looking dreary scene with a grayish-blue background. FlexiSign, the company that makes the flashlight software, has released a patch to their software version 10.0.1.00. It fixes the issue with how bullets travel on a plane. It also includes several bug fixes and several new features. The update is quite minor. It includes a few fixes and small additions. For example, the game now has a Night Vision setting. It also has a night time mode for when you have a flashlight on. Another addition is the ability to use Addons to modify the game. It also has some smaller bug fixes. Here are the download links for the patch: FlexiSign 10.0.1.00
