What is Photoshop? Photoshop is a powerful, industry-standard editing program that allows you to retouch or create photo-quality images from almost any source material. Photoshop is not a new idea. In fact, the technique of manipulating photographs was pioneered in the 18th century by Joseph Nicéphore Niépce and Louis-Jacques-Mandé Daguerre, two French engineers and scientists. Niépce's specialty was the use of chemical processes to create negatives that people could then view in a portable apparatus called a daguerreotype camera. Daguerre's specialty was photography itself, so his invention was a camera that could capture the image in one shot, meaning that the light rays of the image were captured when the camera shutter was open and the image was visible to the human eye or viewfinder. In the 20th century, people began taking photos with their cameras, and these were not just ordinary photographs. As film cameras evolved, they became able to capture a time sequence of photos before, during and after an event. This is called a time-lapse photograph. Photo: GardenWorks Photography, 2016 Photo: GardenWorks Photography, 2016 The development of computers and video technology in the 1980s and '90s allowed us to edit, manipulate and manipulate these time-lapse photographs, because computers are capable of handling huge numbers of calculations. And they could do it quickly. In the past, creating a time-lapse photograph of an event like a garden's blooming flowers would have been a time-consuming process. You'd have to take the photographs, load them into the computer, take your time through the photo manipulation software to make sure each flower is in the right place, and then have a photographer take the images again at a later date. Only after you were sure the photos were perfect would you release them to the public. It's not a quick or easy process, which is why there are very few time-lapse photographers. Today, computer technology can help you edit and manipulate multiple photos at the same time, allowing you to create a sequence of photos in an instant, making the process much easier. By using a camera's lens, a photographer captures a moment when a light

Q: Execute custom user-defined script on every Azure batch data processing job I'm setting up a batch data processing service. I already set up the service and I have a controller that accepts files and processes the data. I set up the controller via a portal and I'm using a YAML file that I can change (I can change anything I want). I use Azure batch PowerShell to run the jobs. Every file that is processed by the batch, I want a script (a Shell script) to execute. What is the best way to execute scripts without logging into the master instance of Azure batch? A: If you go to the "Job Instances" of your jobs on the portal, you'll see a button that says "Add Command". Put your script in the text area and click the "Add Command" button. Q: accessing UILabel from other view controllers I have a UILabel in my first view controller (screen1) that I want to access (print to console) from the second view controller (screen2). My first view controller looks like: `import UIKit class MenuViewController: UIViewController { var text: String! @IBOutlet weak var statusLabel: UILabel! override func viewDidLoad() { super.viewDidLoad() self.statusLabel.text = text } }` How do I access it from my second view controller? `import UIKit class MainViewController: UIViewController { override func viewDidLoad() { super.viewDidLoad() print(text) } }` A: `class MenuViewController: UIViewController { let screen = MainViewController() @IBOutlet weak var statusLabel: UILabel! override func viewDidLoad() { super.viewDidLoad() screen.statusLabel.text = text } }` Now you can access it from any other ViewController you want.
